SWEEPING STATE AID REFORMS

Pensions face big shake-up

By DAVID FLETCHER
Health Services Correspondent

PHASING out of the State Earnings related Pension Scheme together with the most sweeping changes in the Welfare State since it was created 40 years ago were announced by Mr Fowler, Social Services Secretary, yesterday.

The changes are designed to trim the £40 billion-a-year cost of benefits—one third of all public spending—to simplify the system and end the situation where people can be better off living on benefits than they would be if they took a job.

Plans for a new social security system which will last into the next century are outlined in a Green Paper which says that the benefits system has become so complex it resembles a "Dickensian paper chase."

The main proposals are:

Phasing out of the State earnings-related pension scheme (SERPS) for men under 50 and women under 45 — although it will remain for those older.

Occupational or personal pensions to be introduced for those who lose entitlement to SERPS with contributions to be at least four per cent. of earnings and employers required to pay half.

No change in retirement age but discussions on enabling people to retire at any age between 60 and 70.

Supplementary benefit to be replaced by a simpler scheme called Income Support.

Family Income Supplement to be abolished and replaced by "Family Credit" payments in the wage packet.

Housing Benefit to be greatly simplified and payments cut by £500 million.

A new Social Fund to be created as safety net for the poor.

Death and maternity grants to be abolished.

Widows to receive lump sum of £1,000 in place of weekly allowance.

Green Paper in detail—P6; Parliament — P8; Cartoon — P13; Edward Pearce — Back Page; Editorial Comment—P12.

Pension scheme 'too expensive'

The proposals are expected to be highly controversial and Mr Michael Meacher, Shadow Social Services Secretary, said the Labour party regarded them as a central issue which would dominate the next general election.

The Green Paper says SERPS will be prohibitively expensive by the time it matures in the early years of the next century.

The number of pensioners will increase while the number of employed people paying the National Insurance contributions that finance pensions will remain static. The result is the pensions bill will quadruple.

Mr Fowler said: "As a country we cannot ignore these emerging costs. It would be an abdication of responsibility to hand down obligations to our children we believe they cannot fulfil."

With SERPS continuing for men over 50 and for women over 45, men aged 40 to 49 and women aged 35 to 44 will be given special bonuses to enhance their SERPS pensions while they are switching to private pensions.

As many as possible of the 11 million people without occupational pensions will switch to them with the alternative of taking out a personal pension with a compulsory contribution in both cases from their employer.

Existing SERPS rights will be honoured which means that no one retiring during the rest of this century will be affected by the change and neither will any existing pensioner.

£500m saving on housing benefit

Supplementary Benefit and all its complex additions — received by more than four million people — will be swept away and replaced with a much simpler benefit with set rates for different categories of claimant.

More than £500 million is to be saved from the £3,700 million cost of Housing Benefit which will also be drastically simplified.

This saving, the only immediate cost-saving measure in the package, is estimated to lead to cuts of £7 to £12 a week for thousands of people and will prove the single most controversial item.

Although the £6·85 a week child benefit will remain intact, big changes are being made to help low-paid families struggling to support children.

A new benefit, Family Credit, will replace the old Family Income Supplement with the aim of ending the situation

Main issue of next election, says Labour

By JAMES WIGHTMAN Political Correspondent

A PREDICTABLY hostile Labour reception from Mr Fowler's proposed social security changes included a warning that the package would be the main issue at the next General Election, with fatal consequences for the Government.

But Ministers were encouraged last night that the Opposition criticism drew little sympathy from Conservative MPs, many of whom had been apprehensive about the possible electorial impact.

Tory "wets" expressed relief that the changes put forward for discussion were not as sweeping as they had feared.

Although there was no projection of likely savings in the budget for health and social services, the general view among Tory MPs was that Mr Fowler had successfully, and admirably, resisted demands by Mr Lawson, Chancellor of the Exchequer, for big cuts.

Mr Kinnock, Labour's leader, in a lengthy statement last night, said: "Norman Fowler's proposals are not a reform or anything so reasonable.

"They are a crude and cruel way of making the poor poorer, the insecure les secure, the needy more needy.

"Fowler's proposals are an offence against decency and common sense. For everybody's sake, they must be defeated."

Mr Steel, Liberal leader, said in astatement: "The SERPS decision is a typical mixture of hard-headed Tory desire to take money from pensioners and of political compromise.

"I condemn the abolition of SERPS, in whole or in part, withoubt a substantial increase in the basic pension."

But ministers were pleased by the reception from their own backbenches.

They also believed there would be less trouble than had been expected from Mr Francis Pym and members of the recently created Conservative Centre Forward group.

Rising £ revives rate hope

By CLIFFORD GERMAN
Financial Correspondent

THE pound briefly climbed above $1·30 yesterday, helped by the prospects of cheaper money in the United States as its economy weakens. Hopes of interest rate cuts in Britain also revived as a result.

There was selling of sterling around $1·30 however and the pound closed just over ½ cent higher on balance at $1·2917 in London The dollar also weakened against continental currencies.

But the pound also gained ground on the continent, closing 1¼ pfennigs higher at 3·9462 marks, and the trade weighted value rose 0·2 to 80·5 per cent.

Interests rates in the London market eased perceptibly with three-month money in the inter-bank market falling below current bas rate levels for the first time in recent weeks.

Shares index higher

The prospects helped demand for stocks and shares.

The FINANCIAL TIMES 30-share index edged steadily higher to close 8·2 betted on balance at 1,010·7.

Government stocks rose by up to £⅜ and the Government broker was able to sell almost all the £600 million of additional stocks announced last Friday.

Dealers are, however, waiting for the May money supply figures published this afternoon to confirm whether a cut in bank base rates is possible this week.

SO-ACCURATE MISSILE PUTS UP COSTS

By Our Air Correspondent

The deadly accuracy of the Shorts Javelin shoulder-launched missile is presenting the British Army with an unusual problem.

Trainee airliers are destroying so many radio-controlled target drones with direct hits that replacement costs have risen substantially and, in at least one camp, the firing programme had to be cut back due to lack of targets. Each drone costs several thousand pounds.

Made by Short Brothers, the Belfast-based aerospace company, the Javelin is an advanced variant of the shoulder-launched Blowpipe low level air defence system used in the Falklands campaign.

13 TAMILS DIE AS GUNMEN HIJACK BUS

By Our Colombo Correspondent

Thirteen Tamils were shot dead by gunmen, who hijacked a bus near the east coast port of Trincomalee yesterday, after ordering off other Sinhalese and Moslem passengers.

Sixty-five people have now died in sectarian violence over the past two days on the island, where the mainly Hini Tamil minority are pressing for a separate State in the north.

Long queues formed outside the British High Commission near Colombo yesterday. Up to 5,000 Tamils are believed to be applying for entry visas to Britain.

THREE PITS TO BE CLOSED

The National Coal Board yesterday announced the closure of three exhausted North Yorkshire mines with the loss of 2,000 jobs —Ackton Hall, Featherstone, near Pontefract, Savile, near Leeds, and Glasshoughton at Castleford.

The Northumberland National Union of Mineworkers plans to serve a writ on the NCB if it does not make its plan to close Bates colliery, Blyth, subject to the established colliery review programme.

VANDALS RISK TNT BLAST

Vandals risked lives by blocking up a waste pipe from an explosives factory. A spokesman for Exchem Ltd, which makes TNT and nitroglycerine near Harwich, Essex, said it would have caused a fire and explosion if it had not been spotted in time.

The pipe, which takes waste acids into the sea, was blocked with cavity wall foam. Police believe an environmental protection group may have done it.

Ld George-Brown, a man of quality, dies

By H. B. BOYNE
Political Correspondent of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH 1956-76

"HE was a man, take him for all in all" . . . the phrase leapt unbidden as I glimpsed "Death Of George Brown" on a news placard. And I'm pretty certain we shall not look upon his like again, at any rate in the Labour party as we know it now.

For all his faults, and his best friend could scarcely claim they were few or slight, George, who has died aged 70, was for me, in the phrase some of us learned long ago in the Boys' Brigade, the epitome of true Christian manliness.

I got on the wrong side of him quite often, much the worst occasion being when, in the course of a stentorian rebuke in the Ways and Means corridor off the Member's Lobby, he accused me of having deliberately ruined his chances of succeeding Hugh Gaitskell as Leader of the Labour party.

My offence, it appeared lay in having disclosed a private agreement between Harold Wilson and himself to deputise for each other should either win. In my innocence, I had measured that my story would foster much-needed harmony within the Parliamentary party.

Real weakness

But George, clearly suspecting that I could have had only one informant was in a towering rage. He stamped away determined to write at once and denounce me to the Editor-in-Chief.

I confess I went home that night a little worried. Next morning, however, I found on my desk, marked "Strictly Personal," a handwritten note to this effect: "Please forgive and forget everything I said last night. You were only doing your job, and I know now your intentions were good."

Not without pride, I confided at lunch in my old friend and lobby colleague Harold Hutchinson. He commented with a smile "Join the club."

It transpired that he and others could show similar notes — evidence, in my opinion, that George tried hard never to let the sun go down, or at any rate rise, upon his wrath.

Much has been made of his allegedly drunken habits. As one who dined and wined many times in his company, I believe his real weakness was that his taste for drink far outran his capacity.

He changed before your eyes, and for the worse, after two stiff whiskies or gins. If these were followed by more than one glass of claret, he could become well nigh boorish and incoherent — "over-tired" was the key word we coined.

Sober, he was the most courtly of men, especially to women, but when he was in his cups, even this virtue could become an embarrassing blemish.

But don't let anyone tell you that George Brown, deprived though he was of much formal education, was in any degree unintelligent or lacking in clarity of thought.

A former colleague of his in Labour Cabinets, whom I forbear to name because he remains active on the SDP benches in the Lords, once told me that he counted 10 first-class honours men round the Cabinet table.

"But," he added, "if you ask me who had the best and quickest brain there, in the sense of putting his finger unerringly on the real core of any problem, I'd say without hesitation George Brown."

George made enemies of many, worst of all himself. But he also made countless friends who came to know and love him for what he was, a man whose manifest failings and indiscretions never for a moment included cowardice.

I treasure his memory because I believe, like J. M. Barrie, that courage is the thing.

GOWER HITS BACK WITH 102

By MICHAEL CAREY

DAVID GOWER, England cricket captain, ended his bleak spell with an innings of 102 at Lord's yesterday, leading the eight-wicket win over Australia in the final Texaco Trophy game.

Gower, who had been dismissed for three and nought in the two previous games and had gone more than 40 innings without reaching three figures, shared a second-wicket partnership of 202 with Graham Gooch, who was 117 not out.

Gower had struggled to find his form at home last season and again in India during the winter. In that time he had not scored more than 58 in one-day internationals.

A capacity crowd an dhis colleagues watching from the pavilion balcony, gave him a standing ovation when he reached his century.

Bloody-minded

Asked afterwords if he had ever contemplated giving up the captaincy because of his loss of form, he said: "I was certainly not going to give anything up lightly.

"I had heard it suggested, but that made me all the more determined. Call it sheer bloody-mindedness if you like, but my own sense of pride made me determined to prove those in doubt wrong."

Gower, who has been reappointed captain only for the first two Tests, added: "But the public seem to have been behind me, and the support of my own colleagues has been tremendous. I looked up at the balcony, and I was delighted to see them there."

His stand with Gooch was a record for 55-over internationals in England and it was the first time two Englishmen had scored centuries in a one-day game. It was Gooch's second successive century.

Go-ahead for alcohol ban on football fans

By JAMES WIGHTMAN Political Correspondent

THE Government intends to impose an alcohol ban and other anti - hooligan measures on football fans in England and Wales in the new season, the Prime Minister told the Commons yesterday.

She said Ministers would introduce as soon as possible legislation similar to that contained in the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act of 1980 which makes it an offence "to be drunk or to possess alcohol on football coaches, on entry to grounds, and in most areas of grounds."

She added that the Act also makes it an offence "to be in possession of containers which could be used as missiles."

Mrs Thatcher added that, subject to discussions with the opposition parties, it was the Government's intention to have the legislation on the statute book by the summer recess—in time for the coming football season.

The Prime Minister announced the alcohol ban in a statement on the tragedy at the European cup final last Wednesday in Brussels when 38 people were killed and many more injured.

Referring to the conduct of some Liverpool fans who attacked Italian supporters of the Juventus team, she said: "I know that the whole House will share the nation's profound sympathy for the bereaved and injured, and the sense of outrage and shame at the behaviour of some of our citizens which led to the tragedy."

Parliament—P8; Editorial Comment—P12

Mrs Thatcher said there had been a terrible record of violence at European football matches "in which I regret to say that English supporters have played a large part over many years."

In those circumstances, she said, the Government welcomed the initial decision of the Football Association to withdraw English clubs from participation in European competitions next season and fully understood the subsequent decision of UEFA (Union of European Football Associations) to ban English clubs from European competition for an indefinite period."

The Prime Minister listed the alcohol ban at the top of measures "to put our own house in order," and which had been under consideration before the Brussels tragedy because of recent trouble at English football grounds.

She also said that Ministers would proceed next session with the legislation envisaged in the Government's review of public order, in which "the proposals

COMPUTER JOBS ARE AXED

By JOHN PETTY
Commercial Correspondent

THE axing of 450 jobs in production of semi-conductors in Scotland yesterday led to fears that the boom in the electronics industry in Europe is fading.

French and Dutch manufacturers are already pressing for some kind of protection from competition from the Far East. Although demand for semi-conductors is expected to rise by 12 per cent. this year, growth is down from 38 per cent. last year and have excess capacity.

National Semiconductors said the 450 jobs will go at Greenock over the next three months as part of worldwide cuts of 1,300 jobs.

Plans shelved

Inmos, the subsidiary of Thorn EMI, recently decided to cut wages and hours by 20 per cent. at its factory at Newport, Gwent, to avoid redundancies. It also shelved plans to take on 600 recruits.

Elsewhere in electronics, Plessey Military Communications has had three rounds of redundancies in six months and has shed 1,000 workers since 1983. Standard Telephones and Cables made 450 people redundant in the North-west and another 250 in Belfast.

Firms warned a House of Lords Select Committee recently that Britain is heading for a £4 billion trade deficit in electronics by the end of this decade.

TUC FAILED IN PIT STRIKE SAYS BASNETT

By MAURICE WEAVER Industrial Staff

THE failure of the TUC to take the initiative in the pit strike contributed to the miners' defeat and has eroded its own influence and authority, Mr David Basnett, outgoing general secretary of the General Municipal and Boilermarkers Union said yesterday.

Addressing the last conference of his service before retiring, he delivered an outspoken farewell, criticising his fellow TUC leaders, for their intertia and the miners' executive for its go-it-alone strategy.

With the Labour movement facing hostility from the Government and a new pay round due to begin in late summer it was essential that the TUC should re-establish its power as an industrial and social force, Mr Basnett told delegates at Blackpool.

As leader of one of the "big three" manual unions and chairman of the TUC Economic Committee, he had tried to mobilise affiliated unions into an effective force to back the miners' stand, he declared.

He had not succeeded but this was only partly because of the picket line violence, the politicisation of the dispute or Mr Arthur Scargill's failure to carry all his members with him.

'Stay away'

"No doubt they were factors, but one factor wa sresponsible above all others," Mr Basnett said. "That was that, unlike what occurred in the successful 1974 miners strike, this time the TUC and the NUM did not talk in any meaningful way during the first six months of the strike."

That situation had developed because the miners' leaders initially told the TUC and Mr Len Murray, then its general secretary, to stay away.

"It continued because the TUC, against the urgings of this union, took no initiative to exercise the influence it should have had," Mr Basnett asserted.

Mr Basnett, whose address disclosed some of the tensions which built up within the TUC General Council during the coal dispute, expressed the view that in the end there were no victors.

While trade unionists were urged to regard the miners as having achieved a victory because of their "dignity and fortitude," the NUM did not in truth win.

"But neither did the Government. Their second Falklands has left them with a rejection by 70 per cent. of the electo-

"They exposed their weakness: their desire to confront, not to conciliate; the polarisation and divisions they have created in society; their shrill authoritarianism and the barrenness and poverty of their industrial and economic policies."

Mr Basnett, who retires officially at the end of the year, said the TUC's main objectives now must be to weld the movement into a more effective fighting force by cutting out "the damage of competitive trade unionism to ensure that we are not picked off one by one by our hostile opponents."

Individual unions faced pressing problems. His own, the GMBTU, having come within 25,000 of reaching its target of one million members in 1979, had since lost nearly 250,000 members during a period of "financial, legal and political attack."

Speaking later Mr Norman Willis, TUC general secretary, attacked Mrs Thatcher's economic policies but said Labour Party and union leaders alike faced problems in persuading the electorate that they offered acceptable alternatives.

If the concept of a new social compact between the party and organised labour was to be attractive, they had to show a determination to make collective argaining relevant to more people and an ability to agree an appropriate balance between public and private sectors.

"We will have to grasp the nettle of taking a wider view of the distrubtion of income and wealth, both in work and out of work, as well as of working time and the pattern of jobs."

NO PAPER, BUT NO SACKINGS

By STEPHEN WARD Industrial Staff

THE READING EVENING POST failed to appear for the third day yesterday because of a dispute with the National Graphical Association over new technology.

However, the management did not carry out the threat it issued last week to dismiss the 80 NGA members at the newspaper unless the dispute was resolved by yesterday.

Mr James Brown, managing director of Thames Valley Newspapers, owners of the EVENING POST and part of the Thompson Regional Newspapers group, said yesterday: "The decision not to publish was taken after the management had failed to obtain a guarantee from the local representatives of the NGA to work normally."

The NGA had offered to work, but would not promise to work with the normal flexibility or manning arrangements.

Mr Brown said the threat of dismissal still stood.

Two weeks ago the NGA at Reading was offered a new technology clause which guaranteed there would be no compulsory redundancies and no reduction in earnings.

Thames Valley Newspapers has lost more than £5 million over the past four years, and the management has warned that it could close permanently if there is a prolonged stoppage.

Telephone engineers to fight job cuts

By Our Industrial Staff

THE telephone engineers' union warned the Post Office yesterday that it is ready to take industrial action if job cuts result from plans to introduce more electronic technology in its post and ancillary services.

Delegates at the annual conference in Blackpool of the 120,000-strong engineering group of the National Communications Union expressed concern at the content of a "leaked" Post Office document which referred to possible 50 per cent. redundancies.

Mr Bryan Stanley, the union's general secretary, said: "The Post Office have indicated their intention to reduce staff but without discolsing figures to the unions so far.

"Our response to them is—we will fight you all the way."

The union says its members, many of them in key jobs, will refuse to co-operate with the introduction of new technology without assurances that there will be no staff cuts, that displaced workers will be redeployed within the organisation and that employees wil lshare in the financial benefits of change.

The 160,000-member union has 14,000 post office employees, mainly among engineering, technical, clerical and computer staff.

72 pc 'YES' IN POLITICAL FUND VOTE

By STEPHEN WARD Industrial Staff

THE third union to vote on whether it wishes to retain a political fund yesterday announced 72 per cent. in favour.

The Furniture, Timber and Allied Trades Union followed the print union SOGAT '82 and the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation in having clear majorities to keep the fund.

Under the 1984 Trade Union Act all trade unions which wish to continue to donate funds to political parties must ballot their members on the issue before next April. Another 37 such ballots are planned.

In the latest poll, 80,000 ballot papers were issued and the return was 19·7 per cent.

FIGHT FOR 'HUGGING' CASE DON

By MARGOT NORMAN Education Staff

DONS at Warwick University are calling for a reprieve for a colleague who was sacked after "making improper advances" to a girl student.

They say Mr Barry Russell, 41, a theatre studies lecturer, was punished too harshly. More than 70 have signed a petition backing him

Mr Russell is understood to have argued in his defence that Miss Belinda Kellett, 22, twice asked him to "give her a hug" because she was upset over her low examination marks.

He complied, but when he did so in her flat after driving her home she made a complaint about his behaviour.

Mr Russell, who worked at the university for five years, is understood to be the first tenured academic sacked by Warwick. It is notoriously difficult to dislodge an academic once he has attained tenure, commonly regarded as a "job or life" arrangement.

But once a university's Senate and Council have decided whether there is "good cause" for dismissal the decision almost always stands.

Several charges were brought against Mr Russell. One was dismissed by the committee setup to investigate the case because it was trivial. Another charge was dropped by mutual agreement

The other charges are understood to have included gossiping about other dons, undermining tutorial relationships, giving students longer than the rules permit to complete essays, and failing to "declare an interest" on an examination board which was marking papers by his fiancée, former Warwick student.

The investigating committee deliberated for 29 hours on the case and the ruling council sat for six hours before deciding on dismissal.

A university spokeswoman would not comment on the charges against Mr Russell, but stid: "The university would obviously not dismiss anyone for a mere peccadillo."

PICKET DUTY 'HIT CRIME FIGURES'

The shortage of police officers because of the number seconded to miners' picket lines has been blamed for a 7 per cent increase in crime in Northamptonshire last year.

More than 52,000 crimes were committed in the county, and the detection rate fell by 4 per cent. In his annual report the Chief Constable, Mr Maurice Buck, says that the pit dispute contributed to the deterioration of operational achievements over 1983.

Plan for all ILEA schools to have black governors

By JOHN IZBICKI Education Correspondent

EVERY school and college in inner London, even those where all the pupils or students are white, is likely to have at least one black governor on its board from next year, it was disclosed yesterday.

The plan has been put forward by Mrs Frances Morrell, leader of the Inner London Education Authority, who believes that blacks are "seriously underrepresented" on governing bodies.

It is almost certain to be taken up by other Labour-controlled education authorities in other parts of the country.

Mrs Morrell said yesterday: "Anti-racism is part of the education perspective for every child and student, not just for some. All our governing bodies of our schools and colleges must be multi-racial and represent the society of which we are all part."

From next year, when governing bodies are reconstituted at inner London's 1,107 schools, 26 polytechnics and colloges and 19 adult education institutes, co-opted places are to be set aside in order that "some measure of equality" can be ensured.

"In the meantime, we shall be asking all teaching and non-teaching unions, parents and political parties, all of whom have nominating rights, what steps they intend to take to put their own house in order," Mrs Morrell said.

According to a survey recently conducted by the ILEA, 57·6 per cent of pupils attending inner London couty schools were Eglish, Scottish, Welsh or Irish, while 15·6 per cent were of Afro-Caribbean origins and 11·7 per cent of Asian origin.

The survey also showed that only 4·4 per cent of all governers at the schools were of ethnic minority origin (2·7 per cent Afro-Caribean; 1·7 per cent Asian)—hence, Mrs Merrell's assertion of "serious underrepresentation."

The proposal is to be discussed y the Labour group—and is almost certain to be approved—at its next meeting on June 17.

NUT ORDERS PEACE DEAL REVIEWS

By Our Education Staff

THE National Union of Teachers, whose strike "hit list" will affect 313 schools in 30 local authorities and bring 6,500 teachers out of their classrooms between today and Thursday, is to reconsider the peace deal it has made with 42 other authorities.

Mr Fred Jarvis, the union's general secretary, yesterday asked all local branches to check whether the exempted authorities had followed up their premises to the union by asking the Government for more money for teachers, or whether they had simply paid meaningless lip service.

Unless real evidence of support were forthcoming, strikes were likely to be ordered again within the following authorities:

Gateshead, Newcastle, Cleveland, North and South Tyneside, Cumbria, Durham, North Yorkshire, Leeds, Wakefield, Calderdale, Sheffield, Liverpool, Tameside, Wigan, Knowsley, Derbyshire, Lancashire, Dudley, Coventry, Sandwell, Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, Birmingham, West Midlands, and South Glamorgan, Gwent, Dyfed, Gwynedd, Clwyd, Gloucestershire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, Cambridgeshire, Norfolk, Avon, the ILEA, Brent, Hounslow, Haringey, Shropshire, Oxfordshire, Hertfordshire, Suffolk, and Richmond upon Thames.

Lightning strikes

The rival National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers is calling out 15,000 teachers on lightning strikes in 31 local authorities this week.

The executive of the third-biggest of the teacher unions, the Assistant Masters and Mistresses Association, meets in London today to consider its next step in the pay dispute. So far it has refused to strike.

According to the NUT, the invigilation of all examinations by teachers will continue as normal—even if exams continue past 3.30 p.m. when normal schooling usually ends; but numerous authorities have brought in parents and retired teachers to invigilate afternoon exams "just in case", for from £3 to 5 an hour.

HEAD OF BOYS' HOME JAILED OVER PHOTOS

By HEATHER MILLS Old Bailey Correspondent

THE former head of a London children's home was jailed for four years at the Old Bailey yesterday for taking indecent photographs of some of the "disturbed" boys in his care.

Ronald Cooper, 56, a social worker for 17 years at the home run by the London Borough of Lewisham, had taken advantage of the "grossly underprivileged children in his care," said Sir James Miskin, Recorder of London.

Cooper had placed young boys—some only 5 years old, in "revolting poses," photographed them and allowed those photographs to go unlimited on to a "discusting, salacious market," said the judge.

Lewisham council is now holding a public inquiry.

Jailing Cooper, the judge said: 'When a man in a position of trust, particularly in relation to children in his care, breaks that trust with the live risk of teaching each of them bad practices, a prison sentence is inevitable — to protect children as best one can in the future from the likes of you and as a deterrent so that every man or woman in charge of children knows what the consequences will be."

Admitted offenees

Yesterda yhe admitted three offences of taking indecent photographs, two of distributing the photographs, two of inciting children under 14 to commit acts of gross indecency and one of indecent assault.

Those offences took place over five years between 1978 and 1982 and related mainly to chlidren in his care; but police found 34 carefully-indexed photograph album at Cooper's home and believed the offenecs started many years earlier.

Cooper was arrested after detectives investigating male prostitution involving children in the West End uncovered a spin-off racket involving child pornography.

Leads took them to a West London address where photographs relating to Cooper and Cooper's name were discovered.

Mr Timothy Langdale, prosecuting, said police went to Cooper's home and found a tea chest of albums containing photographs of naked children.

During a series of interviews with police, Cooper admitted he had started taking photographs in 1970, mostly at the council home.

He also described an incident some years earlier when he and another man had been to some fields outside Brighton and indecently assaulted two young boys.

Cooper said he and another man had exchanged photographs over a large number of years, both developing and swapping negatives.

Cooper had worked in child care for 26 years. He resigned from his £500 a month job as the resident senior social worker at Leeways immediately after his arrest in December last year.

'Frankly terrified'

Mrs Maureen Mullally, for Cooper, said he accepted the gravity of the offences and was "bitterly ashamed."

She said Cooper, who was likely to serve the whole of his sentence in solitary confinement was "frankly terrified" of the prospect of jail.

"He is likely to have a very rough ride indeed once the prison gates close behind him, no matter what the authorities try to do," she told the court.

Commenting on Lewisham's decision to hold a public inquiry, the judge said it should "seek to discover how the offences could have occurred over so many years undetected, and should try to establish methods to avoid any such thing happening again."

By CHARLES LAURENCE

HUNDREDS of young children were left in the care of Ronald Cooper, jailed at the Old Bailey for indecent assault, Lewisham council admitted yesterday.

The Left-wing South London council is setting up an independent inquiry under Mrs Anita Ryan, a barrister, to investigate the children's home he ran and to recommend tighter controls on the recruitment of staff in the future.

Mr Clive Jordan, chairman of Lewisham social services committee, said: "We are holding the inquiry because everyone concerned, children, staff and parents, has a right to know exactly what happened, and because we want to make sure that this never happens again."

All the children who went to Leaways and are still on the council's books have been checked for damage done by Cooper. There were 16 children in the home at any one time, with eight staff.

Mr Jordan said: "We were surprised that no one seems to have noticed what was going on. One of the things we want from the inquiry is to know whether any complaints were in fact made."

The inquiry is to sit in private, a decision supported by the council's Conservative minority. All recommendations and findings will be published.

The council said privacy would provide a better working atmosphere, particularly as children from the home would have to be interviewed.

Cooper joined Lewisham council to run Leeways in 1966, after working in residential special schools for the Inner London Education Authority.

Council officials said yesterday that they had checked his references before taking him on, and these were good. They had also checked that he had no criminal record.

Cooper's work at Leeways—he resigned after his arrest six months ago and has lost his pension rights — was so popular with social workers that there was a waiting list there during most of the 1970s.

His speciality was assessing children for adoption or fostering, which is why his victims were so young.

Leeways has now been closed under the council's policy of sending children to foster parents rather than keeping them in homes.

Boy of 14 admits sex attack on woman, 88

By JOHN SHAW

A 14-YEAR-OLD with an imitation gun carried out a "callous and unmerciful" sex attack on an 88-year-old spinster after breaking into her home, Mr MARTYN LEVETT, prosecuting, told Chelmsford Crown Court yesterday.

RODNEY FINDLATER and a 13-year-old accomplice confronted Miss Alice Rassall in her hallway after she heard noises.

Findlater pointed a cap pistol at her and said: "Don't make a noise or I'll blow your head off."

Mr Levett said Miss Rassall, who walks with a frame, was ordered to strip, but when she refused Findlater ripped off her nightdress leaving her naked on the bed. She was gagged with a piece of rag and indecently assaulted.

The boys stole a gild wristwatch, a gold picture frame, £20 cash and two Post Office savings books, all of which were recovered.

Findlater, of Berkeley Road, Clacton, Essex, was sentenced to two years' detention after he admitted burglary and indecent assault on Miss Rassall, of Salisbury Road, Holland-on-Sea, Essex, on Jan. 26.

Judge PETER GREENWOOD, passingsentence, told the boy: "You wicked, cruel young horror. Were it not for your age and the fact that pure anger is always a bad judgment I would have sent you away for a long time in the interests of the public."

Mr Peter Roundtree, defending, had said Findlater's part in the incident was out of character as he had no previous convictions. Other residents at a children's home where he had stayed after the crime burned all his clothes in their outrage at what he had done.

His accomplice, who carried a knife in the attack, was not old enough to be dealt with by the Crown Court. He admitted burglary and was placed in care by Clacton Juvenile Court last month.

Pc's £10,000 record drop for charity

Pc Gil Boyd, of Cambridge police, took just under four minutes to descend the tower—recently renamed the Telecom Tower—in the West End of London. It was claimed as a record abseiling descent of a man-made structure.

It was also Pc Boyd's way of paying tribute to his colleague, Pc Bob Reynolds, who died while policing a miners' picket line at Tilmanstone colliery, Kent, when he had a heart attack last November.

In a series of stunts, the two had raised thousands of pounds for the London Hospital, where Pc Boyd's son Thomas has spent most of his five years being treated for an intestinal disorder until he was discharged two weeks ago. Last year they mounted a "death slide" from Tower Bridge, and the year before parascended under Thames river bridges.

Yesterday's event was organised and planned the Royal Marines, five of whose members followed Pc Boyd the 484 feet from the former observation platform at the top of the tower to a car park in a mews at the foot.

Watched by widow

Second man over the parapet was Warrent Officer George Borg, South Shields. Next came Marines Alf Pendlebury, Salford, Mick Cooper, Blackburn, Matt Stowe, Halifax, Andy Kerwood, Southampton, and Colour Sergeant Dave Ford, Exmouth.

Watching the descent was Pc Reynolds's widow, Janet, who travelled from Cambridgeshire to support Pc Boyd.

The man who organised yesterday's descent, Major Phil Wilson of R Company, Royal Marines, based at Poole, Dorset, said the previous record for an abseiling descent had been set last June by a Royal Marine team which descended the Express Lift Company's 410-foot high experimental tower at Northampton.

Yesterday's descent began from the 31st floor of the Post Office Tower, which has been closed to the public since an IRA bomb attack in 1971.

JAIL SENTENCE 'UNFAIR' SAYS CAR THIEF

A man jailed for eight years at the Old Bailey yesterday for stealing a Rolls Royce protested that the sentence was too severe because Maurice Beckford was "only given 10 years" two months ago for killing his stepdaughter, Jasmine.

Stephen Raymond, 39, an antiques dealer from Highbury, said from the dock: "I'm not a mugger, rapist or child killer. Eight years is far too strong. All I've done is steal a car. This sentence is staggering and unfair."

Raymond, with a criminal record going back to 1959, had previously been given an eight-year sentence at the same court for stealing £2,500,000 at Heathrow. Judge Thomas Pigot, QC, described Raymond as an intelligent criminal and said the public had to be protected from him.

His wife, who is also a doctor, lives in Highbury with the couple's two daughters. The decree nisi was granted on the grounds of her adultery with Mr Ray Williamson. Dr Buckman now lives in Canada.

Helicopter in hunt for double rapist

By COLIN RANDALL

POLICE used a helicopter yesterday in the hunt for a youth suspected of raping two schoolgirls in Wiltshire within three weeks.

The helicopter fle wover open countryside on the edge of Salisbury Plain near Westbury after a reported sighting.

Detectives know the identity of the 17-year-old they wish to question about both sex attacks, and fear he may strike again.

In the latest attack, a 15-year-old girl was accosted while takin gan evening stroll on Sunday in the village of Lacock, near Chippenham.

A youth approached from behind as she crossed a river bridge, held a knife at her throat and dragged her to a car which had been stolen in Northamptonshire the day before. He drove her to a local beauty spot, Bowden Hill, and raped her.

The girl was able to give police the lead that her attacker had a golden labrador he called Bitzy.

Babysitter raped

On May 13, an 11-year-old girl was raped after being threatened with a knife while babysitting at a friend's hous in Warminster.

During a three-week hunt, the wanted youth has been dubbed "the teenage Fox" because of his apparent ability to live rough in wooded, hilly countryside.

He is believed to have stolen a number of vehicles, including a Land-Rover later found burnt out on the Mendips in Somerset.

The youth described as 6ft and slim with collar-length hair, and police believe he may now be using another Land-Rover, registration DUF 652Y, which was tolen after the second rape.

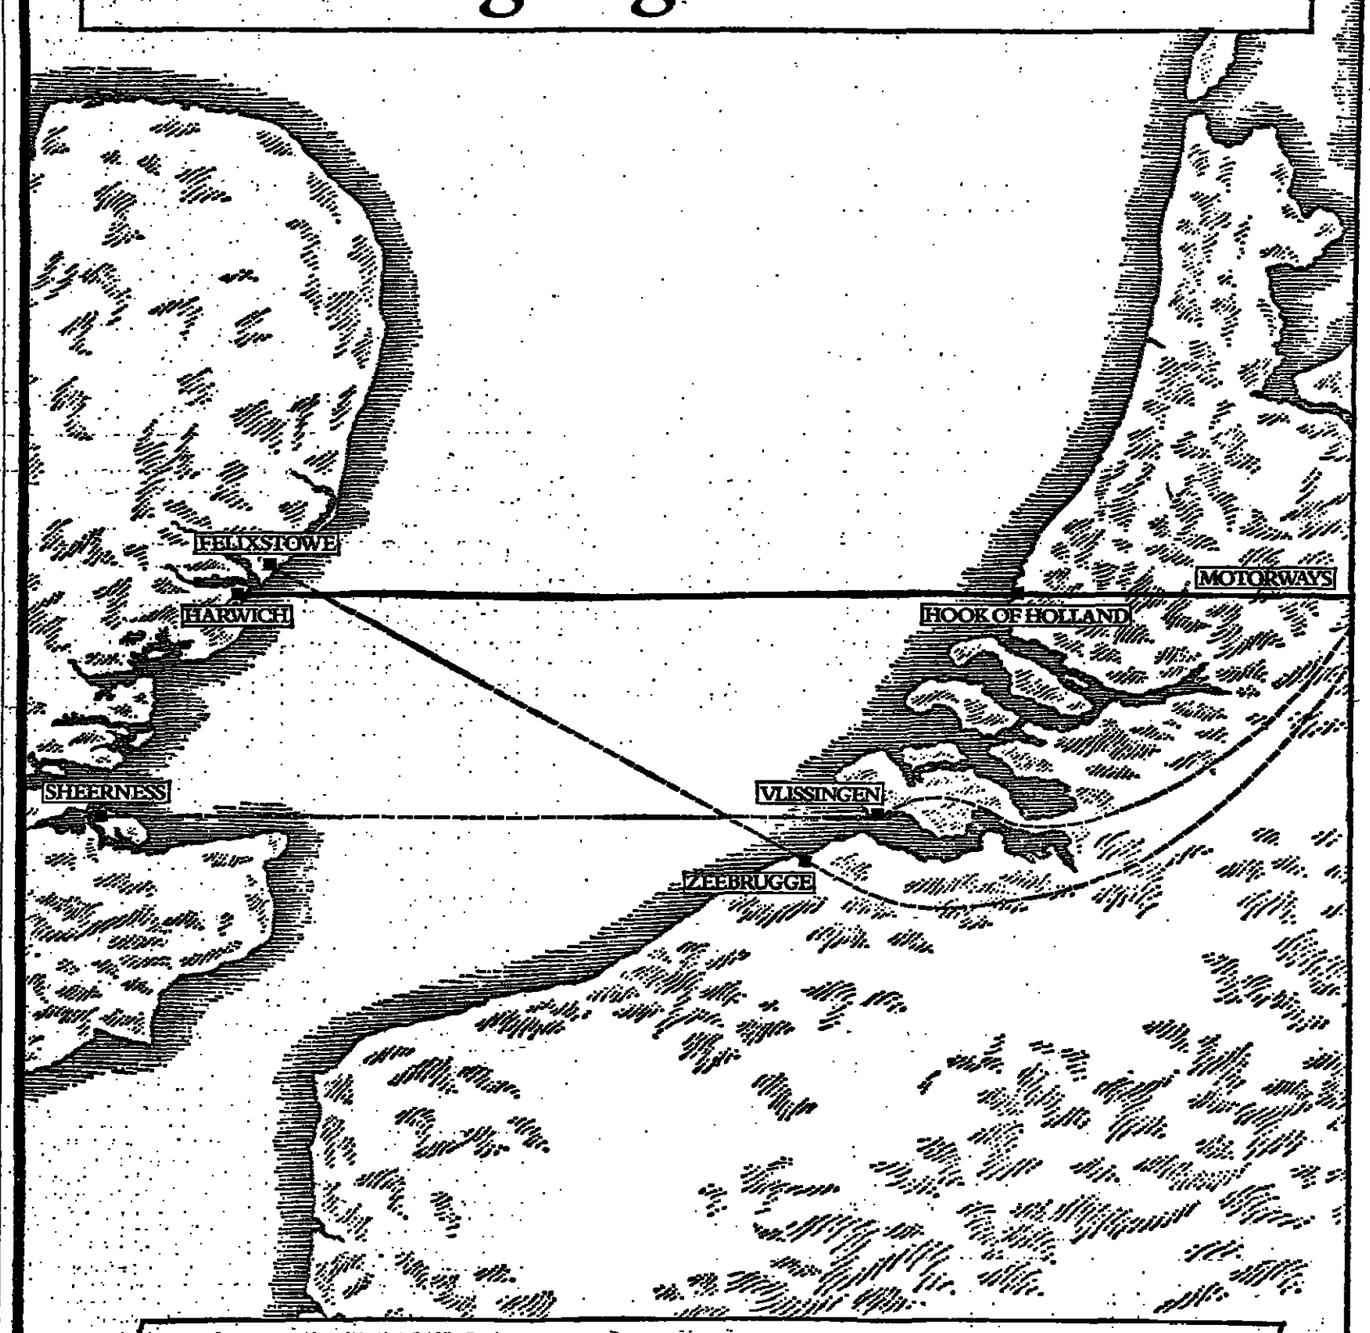
How to drive to Holland or beyond without going round the bend.



There are a number of ways to get to Holland by sea but only one that's worth its salt.

Sealink's Harwich to the Hook of Holland route. A somewhat biased statement, we know. So examine the facts for yourself.

Firstly, Harwich is ideally situated for access from London, the Midlands and the north of England.

Secondly, the Hook of Holland is ideally situated for Amsterdam, Rotterdam, The Hague and the motorways to the rest of Europe. Whereas Vlissingen and Zeebrugge are not.

And, finally, we offer two luxury ships (the St. Nicholas and Prinses Beatrix). Ships which sport first class restaurants, lounge bars, duty-free supermarkets, casinos, cinemas and private cabins.

By now, you'll agree that Sealink really is the only way to drive to Holland. Without, that is, driving yourself mad.

INTERMEDIARY MID-EAST ROLE FOR BRITAIN

By JOHN BULLOCH Diplomatic Staff

BRITISH ministers and officials began a week-long stint as intermediaries in Middle East discussions yesterday when Sir Geoffrey Howe, Foreign Secretary, held a long meeting with Mr Shamir, the Israeli Foreign Minister and Prime Minister-in-waiting.

In his two-and-a-half-hours of talks with the Foreign Secretary, Mr Shamir devoted most time to the prospects for Middle East negotiations. He also dealt with relations between Israel and the European Community, and with the situation in Lebanon.

Mr Shamir, leader of the Right-wing Likud bloc in the Israeli Parliament, is due to succeed Mr Shimon Peres as Prime Minister in autumn next year.

The emphasis on Middle-East negotiations was plainly because King Hussein of Jordan is due to have talks with Mrs Thatcher at the end of this week. King Hussein appears to have made enough progress in his talks in Washington to worry the Israeli Right.

So yesterday Mr Shamir, while correctly spelling out his country's official position, also stressed the conditions he and his supporters would attach to any new talks.

On defensive

Mainly, Likud would object to the inclusion of any Palestinians who were associated with or supporters of, the Palestine Liberation Organisation. While similarly excluding P L O members, Mr Peres and the Israeli Labour party would acept as spokesmen sympathisers who were not members.

King Hussein appears to have put Israel on the defensive by his assurance that the P L O will accept as a pre-condition of any talks acceptances of Israel's right to exist. In the past, the P L O has withheld that recognition as it saw it as the one ace in its hand.

Now, fragmented and demoralised, the P L O led by Yasser Arafat, the only body with which King Hussein deals, is far more ready to make concessions. Already King Hussein has assured the Americans the P L O will accept "all relevant United Nations resolutions."

This clearly includes Resolution 242, the basic Middle East resolution, which affirms Israel's right to exist, "within secure and recognised borders."

Mr Shamir and the Right in Israel fear any negotiations will end up with concessions by Israel, and so seek excuses to avoid talks.

Mr Shamir will put his uncompromising views to Mrs Thatcher in Downing Street today, but for once the Foreign Office will do the negotiating.

Direct talks

Mr Richard Luce, the Foreign Office Minister in charge ofthe Middle East, was at yesterday's talks, and will convey their content to King Hussein in three day's time.

While direct talks between the Americans and the Jordanians and the Israelis will go ahead, diplomats believe the coincidence of the visits to London by Mr Shamir and King Hussein will enable Britain to use the considerable influence it still has in Jordan and in Israel.

One area in which Mrs Thatcher will back the American line is in opposition to negotiations in the framework of an international conference, at which the Soviet Union would be represented.

Against that, Britain is in favour of the direct participation of the P L O in any talks. The British compromise would probably be to back a list of P L O sympathisers and supporters who were not organisation members.

'Replace judge' uproar at trial of dissidents

By ROBIN GEDYE Diplomatic staff

THE trial of three of Poland's most prominent opposition figures began in uproar yesterday with one being removed in handcuffs while a second refused to return to the courtroom from his cell after a recess.

The three, charged with trying to organise an illegal strike, told the court the chief judge was biased.

Mr Adam Michnik, 38, a well-known dissident intellectual, filed a protest demanding that the judge be replaced. After an hour's recess, the court announced the petition had been rejected.

His lawyer described the conduct of the judge as "scandalous." Mr Michnik was removed from court for ignoring Chief Judg Krzysztof's questions.

Walesa summoned

Mr Frasyniuk and Mr Bogdan Lis, 35, a former underground leader of the Gdansk region, accused the court of refusing to let them testify freely.

The trial has been closed to Western reporters and observers.

The three are accused of trying to organise a 15-minute national strike in February 1984 to protest against large price rises. Mr Lis and Mr Frastniuk have pleaded not guilty.

Mr Michnik, a dissident and not a trade unionist, refused to enter a plea on the grounds that he did not understand the charges.

Mr Lech Walesa, leader of the banned Solidarity trade union, has been summoned as a witness by the State Prosecutor today, in what is seen as the most magnificant move against Solidarity activtists since an amnesty last July freed the three dfendants along with more than 600 political prisoners.

500 KILLED IN IRAQI ATTACK ON TEHERAN

By A Special Correspondent in Athens

At least 50 people are reported to have been killed in the latest Iraqi bombing raid on the Iranian capital on Sunday night, which residents in Teheran said by telephone yesterday was one of the worst in the Gulf war.

The semi-official KAYHAN evening newspaper put the casualties at 11 killed and 44 injured, but one eye witness was quoted by residents as saying he counted about 50 bodies in dugouts from under the debris.

The military high command in Baghdad yesterday said that Iraqi planes had also bombed the Iranian oil terminal at Kharg Island for the second time in less than a week.

CYCLONE HIT 1·5m PEOPLE

By GRAHAM JONES in Dacca

BANGLADESH'S national relief committee meets today and is expected to specify projects into which international aid should be channelled after the cyclone disaster, now known to have affected 1,516,000 people and killed up to 10,000.

After sending an immediate £50,000 Britain was among many countries and relief agencies holding back further contributions — £700,000 in Britain's case — until plans were framed to protect coast dwellers against similar happenings in future.

More than 100,000 homes have been badly damaged or totally destroyed. The storm effected 2,600 square miles on a 250-mile stretch of coastline, and 22 miles of embankment have been lost.

In addition to much-needed new homes designated projects are likely to include new and bigger coastal defences and embankments, many more cyclone shelters, and improved warning systems.

There has been criticism of the often complete lack of protection for residents of the coastal island ricefields in the bay of Bengal and the practically non-existent detection and a warning system.

Radio warnings of the cyclone were given, but almost none of the poor rice-farming families in the estuaries had radio sets on which to receive them.

Study for £300m dam

President Ershad of Bangladesh ordered his Minister of Planning and other Government officials yesterday to complete a feasibility study for a giant dam stretching from the worst-hit island of Urir Char to the neighbouring island of Sandwip

It is a less grandiose scheme than a longer barrier that had been mooted, but it would still cost at least £300 million.

Nevertheless the President indicated that international aid funds were available, and a giant dam may form part of the overall plan announced today.

After a cyclone disaster in 1970 the World Bank gave 238 cyclone shelters of sturdy concrete, each accommodating 500 people, and the Red Cross built 157 hillocks each 20ft high.

Sadly the latter proved an unattractive refuge in torrential rain and very strong wind because they were so open to the elements.

Apart from long-term measures, there is an immediate urgency about work to be done in Bangladesh, for monsoon rains are expected within 48 hours along with high tides due to a full moon.

Many of the cyclone-stricken settlements are still subject to flooding, and an epidemic that has killed at least 150 people and effected more than 1,000 was confirmed yesterday as cholera. Lack of fresh water along the coastline exacerbates the situation.

Farmers helped Greek Socialists to win

By MICHAEL FIELD in Athens

MR ANDREAS PAPANDREOU, the Greek Socialist Prime Minister, who won a clear five per cent. majority in Sunday's general election, has formed a temporary 10-member Cabinet.

This is pending Parliamentary approval of his plan to reduce the size of his former 52-member Government, the biggest in Europe.

The Socialist victory appears, from raw results yesterday, to have been largely due to sustained support by Greek farmers benefiting from E E C subsidies and to a modest swing of Communist voters who ignored orders to vote only for the pro-Moscow Greek Communist Party.

The Communist leader, Mr Harilaos Florakis, said that a section of Left-wing voters had been influenced by "Socialist-instigated danger-mongering," and various forms of electoral discrimination, which helped both the Socialists and the Right wing.

The Communists' true strength was not represented by the election results but would be seen later, he said.

Papandreou's appeal

After Sunday's victory, in which Pan-Hellenic Socialist Movement (Pasok) won 45.82 per cent of Greece's six million voters to 40.84 per cent by the conservative New Democracy party, Mr Papandreou appealed to all Greeks to help with "change and modernisation" and to contribute to Greece's economic and social development.

He called the result as a great victory for the people and a major defeat for domestic and foreign reaction.

Commenting on his drop in votes since 1981, when Pasok won 48 per cent, Mr Panandreou said it was inevitable for every Government to suffer some losses.

The result had put an end to domestic and foreign "guardians, patrons and protectors," he said in obvious reference to the Americans and to former President Karamanlis, whose intervention last Friday urging Greeks to vote against Pasok he called "an impropriety."

Mr Constantine Mitsotakis, leader of New Democracy, who conceded defeat just before dawn yesterday, said the Greek people had made their choice, and he would not question it.

But he criticised the Government's "monopoly of information media" and "constant violation of inter-party agreements."

'Unpleasant if . . .'

He added: "The result does not reflect the political will of the voters." There had been heavy Government psychological pressure, also physical violence. In Crete the police stood by while Pasok supporters fired shots at Opposition voters and attacked New Democracy offices.

The conservative leader said he hoped Mr Papandreou would use his marginal majority to reshape his policy in a realistic, responsible way. Otherwise devolepments would be "highly unpleasant".

Latest results available yesterday were that 79·2 per cent of the registered electorate of over eight million (in figures, 6,392,868) voted.

Of the valid votes Pasok won 2,902,962 (45·82 per cent); New Democracy, 2,587,359 (40·84); Greek Communist party, pro-Moscow, 626,629 (9·89); and Euro-Communist party 116,485 (1·84).

On this basis allocated seats under the system of reinforced proportional representation are: Pasok 161, New Democracy 125, Greek Communist party 15; Euro-Communists 1.

Quit call to Weinberger on defence spending

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

PLAGUED by revelations of massive overcharging by defence contractors and with his military budget under fire on Capitol Hill, Mr Weinberger, Defence Secretary, is being pressed by some members of Congress to resign.

But in characteristic fashion he brushed aside the controversies yesterday by saying he would remain in office because he still had much more to do in building up America's military strength.

"It's like being a judge in a beauty contest," he said in a newspaper interview. "The longer you do it, the more people you disappoint."

Mr David Pryor and Mr Lawton Chiles, two Democratic members of the Senate, openly called on Mr Weinberger to go so that the Pentagon could regain some credibility. Other members of Congress, who did not want their names published, agreed.

Mr Weinberger's troubles stem as much from continuing disclosures of overcharging for items supplied to the services as from his inability to persuade key Congressmen to support his requests for new weapons systems.

Congress unconvinced

The Pentagon, it has been disclosed, paid $7,400 (£5,700) each for custom-made coffee urns for air force transport planes. Hammers and wrenches cost hundreds of dollars apiece and, most recently, ashtrays for naval-aircraft-brought their manufacturer $559 (£508) each.

Although Mr Weinberger, with the support of President Reagan, maintains that public disclosure of such waste is evidence that his department watchdogs are doing their job, Congress is not convinced.

"He should have called somebody in long ago to deal with all these problems," said Mr Pryor. "Congress has awakened from deep slumber and entered the world of realism. We realise there have to be some changes."

Mr Weinberger's problems have been exacerbated by a growing awareness in Congress and among the public of the urgent need for cuts in Government spending to bring down the federal deficit.

In yesterday's interview Mr Weinberger said of his tenure at the Pentagon: "We've accomplished a great deal but there is still a great deal to do. The important thing is to stop before you get tired."

Was he tired? "No," he said firmly.

'Bombing' joke

One Press report said yesterday that Mr Donald Regan, the new White House chief of staff, kept Mr Weinberger "as far away from the President as possible."

Mr Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman was asked about this at a briefing yesterday. He replied: "If we need to bomb the Russians, we'll let Weinberger in. We won't leave him banging on the door."

Mr Speakes then laughed to indicate he was joking.

Later, Mr Speakes said the report was not true and Mr Weinberger had normal access to the President, who had confidence in him and would keep him in his post.

47 HOTELS AFFECTED BY STRIKE

By ALAN OSBORN in New York

GUESTS at some of New York's most famous hotels were forced to carry their own luggage past long lines of jeering pickets yesterday as a pay strike by 14,000 hotel employees entered its third day.

The walk-out by chambermaids, cooks, barmen and porters was the first in almost 50 years. It affected 47 of New York's major hotels including the Waldorf-Astoria, the Plazo, the Pierre, the Ritz Tower and the Hilton.

Picket lines formed outside all hotels affected and non-union workers, mostly college students, were forced to endure shouts of "scab" and in some cases jostling as they tried to enter the buildings.

The unions have claimed that, in their efforts to beat the strike, hotel managements have recruited staff without any proper checking of their backgrounds. "How would you like to leave your children in care of a convicted molester or rapist?," read one hand-out written by the strikers.

Virtually all the hotels have stopped room service and rooms are made up only every other day by management personnel. Laundry services, bars and restaurants have been closed, though some hotels are operating emergency coffee services using urns filled in nearby restaurants.

8 shot dead in jail of fear

Eight prisoners escaping from overcrowded cells were shot dead and seven were severely wounded by police at Campinas, near Sao Paulo, Brazil, at the weekend. The men feared transfer to a sector where there is a "lottery of death."

Since March condemned prisoners in Brazil have been protesting against overcrowding by a "lottery" in which one of them is chosen to die each week. Prisoners in the city of Belo Horizonte killed another inmate on Friday night despite policep recautions. He was the 16th such victim.

Australia looks for skills

Skilled and business migrants are at the top of a revised Australian immigration list for the next financial year, beginning on July 1, that will lift the intake from 80,000 this year to 84,000.

A points system incorporated into the guidelines also gives an advantage to British migrants. Those who speak English and have business or technical qualifications will gain high points.

Tie-up by Boeing and Sikorsky

Boeing and Sikorsky are to pool engineering resources for a bid to replace the United States Army's 7,000 light helicopters with a new type, the LHX.

The cost of the United States Army's initial requirement for 4,500 helicopters in two versions, scout-attack and utility, will be about £18,000 million.

Marcos to stand again

President Ferdinand Marcos, 67, is to run for re-election in 1987, seeking a new six-year term to enable him to carry out a pledge to lift the debt-strapped Philippines from its worst economic crisis since the 1939-45 war.

State-run vegetable shops in Peking have cut prices by nearly a third because of complaints of shortages and rising prices, after the city had earlier decided to let supply and demand determine prices.

Sakharov's shadow over Helsinki accords celebration

By NIGEL WADE in Moscow

SOVIET authorities face a problem over what to do with Dr Andrei Sakharov, the dissident physicist, as the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki human rights accords approaches.

Foreign ministers from the 35 Western and communist countries who signed the accords on Aug. 1, 1975, are expected in Helsinki for the anniversary.

Soviet dissidents and human rights activists have been wiped out as a significant pressure group in the intervening decade by a KGB campaign of arrests, threats and forced deportations.

But Dr Sakharov, 64, exiled without charge or trial to the city of Gorky in 1980, remains the living symbol of Soviet dissent, despite all attempts to isolate and silence him.

The treatment of Dr Sakharov and his activist wife, Yelena Bonner, who is also confined to Gorky, 250 miles east of Moscow, continues to cause worldwide concern. It will be a major embarrassment to the Kremlin as governments mark the first 10 years of the Helsinki accords.

Several options

Speculation has increased among Western observers in Moscow about whether the Soviet authorities will try to change the Sakharovs' situation in some way before the Heisinki anniversary gathering in two months.

Western diplomats in Moscow believe the Kremlin has several options in dealing with the Sakharovs before the Helsinki anniversary, including doing nothing at all.

"They have the couple almost completely isolated now and are managing to live with international protests," one diplomat said. "If they changed their situation in any way, it might only start a new row."

Moscow has refused to let Dr Sakharov emigrate, saying that he knows State secrets from the days when he was the country's leading nuclear physicist involved in weapons research.

Diplomats believe a change of mind on this before the Helsinki anniversary would carry the risk for the Kremlin of Dr Sakharov's becoming the spokesman for international condemnation of Soviet human rights abuses.

Drug effects

A move from Gorky might be an option, enabling officials to claim the couple had chosen "retirement," perhaps somewhere near the Black Sea. But it is not thought their isolation from Westerners or from friends in Moscow would be lessened in any way.

Some analysts think the authorities hope drug treatment of Dr Sakharov, which Western diplomats believe has been supervised by a specialist from Moscow, may yet break his will and produce a "recantation" of his dissident beliefs.

This would be seen as so cynical and outrageous, however, that it would only make worldwide protests more intense.

Dr Sakharov, who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1975 for his defence of human rights, is believed to have been on hunger strike in April and May. This and another fast last year were attempts to win permission for his wife to receive eye treatment in the West. On both occasions Dr Sakharov is believed to have been force-fed.

Mrs Irina Kristi, a close family friend, was bundled aboard a flight from Moscow to Vienna last month, apparently to prevent her acting as a link between the Sakharovs and Westerners in Moscow. She said the couple were "in reasonable health" but Dr Sakharov was very depressed and their situation remained "bad and tragic."

Soviets wrest Pacific foothold from West

By IAN WARD in Singapore

RUSSIAN fishing trawlers are expected to be operating electronic intelligence-gathering equipment before the end of this year throughout the strategic waters of Kiribati in the central Pacific.

This follows secret negotiations in Singapore between the Russians and representatives of the island republic's Government.

The United States, Australia and New Zealand have expressed deep concern over Russian "fishing operations" in those waters being linked to the increasing Soviet navy presence in the general Pacific region.

But each had rejected feelers from Kiribati several months before the Moscow approach, over the possibility of development funds.

It is thought that a grant of only $5 million (£2,500,000) would have effectively blocked alternative financing from Russia.

Apply pressure

Mr T. Kirata, National Resources Minister and head of the Kiribati delegation, has flown back to Tarawa, his country's tiny capital, to place the results of his controversial bargaining before the island Government, before the signing of a formal agreement with Moscow.

Kiribati officials insist the Russian fishing deal is nothing more than a "commercial arrangement."

They are adamant the agreement only gives the Russians the right to use eight or nine vessels, fishing for tuna, with no provision for a shore base or any permanently-stationed Russian personnel on the islands.

Western military observers, however, express concern that the island Government has no means of policing whatever the Russians choose to do in the two million square miles of isolated waters.

The predictions are that Moscow will apply as much pressure as possible in the coming months to broaden the scope of its newly-arranged presence.

REAGAN LOOKS AT FUTURE OF SALT II

By Our Washington Staff

President Reagan consulted members of his National Security Council yesterday on whether the United States should continue to observe the Salt II arms limitation treaty after it expires at the end of the year.

Mr Shultz, Secretary of State, is expected to sound out the allies on the subject when he attends a Nato meeting in Lisbon this week. Some allied governments have urged Washington to keep observing the treaty as a contribution to arms control.

'TYRANNY' PRAYERS SPARK ROW

By Christopher Munnion in Johannesburg

SOUTH AFRICA'S leading clergymen were deeply divided yesterday over the call by the influential South African Council of Churches for a day of prayer "for the downfall of the Government."

The date, June 16, is the anniversary of the Soweto violence in 1976 which spread to black townships throughout the country.

But the wording of the prayers, which call for the removal from power of the "tyrannical oppressors," the present National Party Government of Mr P. W. Botha, has shaken the moderate Church establishment.

Prof Ben Engelbrecht, head of religious studies at Witwatersrand University, said the Government was doing its utmost to move away from apartheid.

'Killing of tyrants'

"Such an appeal at this moment seems malevolent and is taking the name of God in vain," he said.

Two leading churchmen, the Most Rev. Phillip Russell, Archbishop of Cape Town, and the Rev. David Storey, president of the Methodist Church, have dissociated themselves from the council's call.

But the wording appears to be supported by Dr. Manas Buthelezi, president of the council, and Dr Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches and chief patron of the United Democratic Front.

Dr Boesak said: "Throughout history there is a tradition of 'tyranicide' — the killing of tyrants.

"We are not there yet, but we have pleaded with the Government and they have refused to respond."

EARL'S HAVEN FOR 150 HIPPIES AFTER BATTLE

By COLIN RANDALL

THE EARL of Cardigan, Old Etonian and secretary to Marlborough Conservatives, was providing a haven for 150 hippies caught up in Saturday's battle with police trying to stop them reaching Stonehenge.

Lord Cardigan, 32, who witnessed the clashes, said he helped the hippies because he did not want to see any further trouble.

He criticised police, who used riot gear and made mass arrests. "It was like using a sledgehammer to crack a nut."

He said of the hippies: "Having been through hell, even self-inflicted hell, common humanity demands that they should be allowed a brief period of respite to get their wits about them."

The hippies, including many women and children, are camping on a site on the north-west fringe of Savernake Forest, Wiltshire.

Police were on the alert yesterday for a new attempt by hippies to establish the illegal festival at Stonehenge. A helicopter kept watch over the Savernake estate and police were on duty outside.

Wiltshire police were unable to comment last night on claims by the Earl that officers had twice suggested to him that he should allow them on to the campsite to "finish the job" and disperse the hippies.

Funny accent

Lord Cardigan, son and heir of the 8th Marquess of Ailesbury, manages the estate for his father.

He said: "I am not a long-haired leftie. I have short back and sides, went to public school, speak with a funny accent and am a creature of the Establishment.

"I don't condone the hippies. But not to have allowed these por people on to my land to recuperate after what they have been through even if it was brought upon themselves, would have been inhuman. The site it like a refugee camp."

Lord Cardigan had followed the convoy on his motorcycle from Savernake, where it had camped on Friday, to the field near Cholderton on the Hampshire-Wiltshire boarder where police eventually charged the hippies.

He said he went because he knew that if the police repelled them, they would probably return to his land and because he wanted to witness whatever conflict ensued "from both ends."

He said: "The hippies had no right to be in that field, they broke the law, they flouted a High Court injunction and they were rash to go there in the presence of women and children. On the other hand, their vehicles are their homes and you do find women and children in homes.

"Assuming the police knew this, it was surprising that they should break in the windows of every single vehicle, covering the women and children inside with broken glass.

"Seeing, in a Hampshire field, not Northern Ireland or Lebanon, on that summer's afternoon pregnant women screaming hysterically and babies lying in broken glass, for whatever reason, really cut me up as a father of a six-month-old baby."

He agreed police were provoked by missile throwing, including some catapulting, and by verbal abuse and that in some cases officers were in danger of being run down by convoy vehicles.

Boy dragged off

"Readers of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH will not have too much pity for the hippies" he said. "They broke the law, but two wrongs don't make a right. It was not the women or children who were causing the aggression but they ended up getting hurt."

Lord Cardigan said he saw a boy of about 14 with no weapon being dragged away by police "with blood dripping from him like Niagara Falls. It was very distressing."

Senior police have strongly denied that unnecessary force was used to remove hippies from the field. They say the riot squad was sent in only after officers had come under considerable attack and after repeated attempts to persuade the hippies to leave peacefully.

Chief Constable of Wiltshire, Mr Donald Smith, told a press conference at Devizes yesterday: "I cannot comment on what happened on Saturday afternoon except to say that I am satisfied that my officers did their duty in upholding the law."

Eire 'incursion' wrangle goes on

By COLIN BRADY in Belfast

DIPLOMATIC exchanges continued yesterday between Dublin and London concerning an "incursion" last week by a British Army patrol seeking terrorists in a border area adjoining Co. Louth.

The Irish government is investigating complaints by local people that the patrol, which says it misread maps, removed a valve from an oil storage tank before returning to Northern Ireland last Friday. The action threatened to pollute water supplies to the town of Dundalk.

Residents complained that "60" British soldiers crossed from the volatile South Armagh area and searched farmhouses before entering a small industrial estate containing an oil depot.

Irish security authorities said that five British soldiers had crossed the border at 11 a.m. on Friday, but were challenged by a joint Army-police patrol. The soldiers told the Irish police that a map-reading error had occurred, and turned back without confrontation.

Shortly afterwards the Irish police were told of a diesel oil escape and the removal of a valve from one oil storage tank.

A spokesman for Army headquarters in Lisburn, Co. Down, denied that soldiers had been involved in an incident which had left residents of Dundalk without water for two nights.

Tax-for-arms protester faces jail

ROGER FRANKLIN, a conscientious objector, is facing a possible 14-day jail sentence because he is witholding more than £4,000 from the taxman.

Mr Franklin, 57, a smallholder of Horsley, Gloucestershire, objects to his taxes being spent on weapons of mass destruction.

"My proposal is that I be allowed to make payments not to the Government but to some organisation that will do something for world peace," he told the recorder, Mr MICHAEL FAUVELLE at Stroud County Court yesterday. His £4,165 tax debt was "tucked away"

Said the Recorder: "Most of us object to some of the ways our taxes are used. I would like to deduct the money spent on art and music which are things I do not think much of.

"But if we all had a say it would be a frightful place. Some people might not approve of spending taxes on anything and wouud not pay a penny."

The Judge made an order committing Mr Franklin to jail for 14 days but suspended it until October 1 to enable him to take his case to appeal.

"I admire your principles but I have to make an order. I wish you luck at the Court of Appeal," he said.

Courts crammed for Stonehenge hearings

PEOPLE arrested in the battle for Stonehenge arrived by the coachload at courts in Hampshire and Wiltshire yesterday as magistrates began hearing evidence against about 250 of more than 500 in custody.

They appeared at courts in Eastleigh, Portsmouth, Southampton and Winchester in Hampshire and Salisbury, Wiltshire.

Police say about 550 people have been arrested so far in the operation to prevent the staging of an illegal pop festival at the ancient monument on Salisbury Plain. Of these, 510 were arrested during Saturday's clashes between police and hippies fro ma "peace convoy" at Cholderton, 10 miles from Stonehenge.

Most face charges of obstruction, some have been accused of assault and 44 people arrested near Stonehenge on Saturday appeared before magistrates at Portsmouth facing charges of unlawful assembly. All were granted conditional bail as their cases were adjourned.

'Life imprisonment'

MR DAVID EVAN-HUGHES, prosecuting, applying for the cases to be adjourned, told the court: "This is a very serious offence." He explained that the charge, which carries a maximum penalty of life imprisonment, had to be tried at a Crown Court.

One of the accused appearing at Salisbury was asked his address and replied. My address is the road.

Asked where he would like to report weekly to police he said: "We are one family and I don't know where we will go."

It as agreed that he and some others should report weekly to Nebury police station in Berkshire.

Many of those appearing at Salisbury were given bail on condition that they do not go within a 25 mile radius of Stonehenge, which includes Savernake Forest where the "peace convoy" originally formed. Yesterday Salisbury magistrates heard about 60 cases. They are exepcted to sit throughout this week.

Twenty-six men and four women arrested on Saturday appeared at Winchester yesterday charged with unlawful assembly contrary to common law. One man was remanded in custody and the others were granted bail to appear at Salisbury on August 2.

Violence broke out at Cholderton after the convoy tried to break through a police roadblock. Twenty-four people were taken to hospital.

The Historic Buildings and Monuments commission, which owns Stonehenge, and the National Trust, which owns the 1,500 acres around it, had won High Court injunctions banning an annual pop festival held at Stonehenge in recent years.

'NO BODY' MURDER TRIAL

By HEATHER MILLS
Old Bailey Correspondent

A MAN stood in the dock at the Old Bailey yesterday accused of murdering an antiques dealer whose body has not been found.

Despite extensive police investigations across Europe there has been no trace of Mr Roy Porjes, of Belsize Park, who disappeared on July 1 two years ago.

However, Mr Michael Worsley, Q.C., claimed the prosecution had no doubt that Mr Porjes, 36, had died after being attacked and robbed by two fellow British holiday-makers in Athens on that day.

Alan McQueen, 33, of West Wittering, Sussex, denies murdering Mr Porjes but admits fraud and conspiracy. He used Mr Porjes cheque book and credit cards after the antique dealer's disappearance.

Blood stain

Mr Worsley claimed Mr Porjes, holidaying in a camper van, met McQueen, his girlfrind nd another man by chance in an Athens car park at the end of June, 1983.

He said the three took Mr Porjes' van and travelled through Greece, Yugoslavia, Austria and Germany, spending more than £5,000 on Mr Porjes's bank and credit accounts.

He said police had managed to trace the camper van used by the trio. Extensive forensic examination had revealed that a large quantity of blood had at one time stained the rear compartment.

Mr Worsley told the jury a key witness in the trial was McQueen's girlfriend, Stephanie Belcher. She would tell the court how the two men admitted to her that they had mugged and robbed Mr Porjes and had "left him very badly hurt—but alive."

The other man, named in court as Mike Latham, had gone to America, the court heard.

The trial was adjourned until today.

Serps to be phased out: 'Insupportable burden on future generations'

COMPULSORY PENSIONS SCHEMES FOR ALL EMPLOYEES

THE State earnings-related pension scheme is to be phased out because it will impose an insupportable burden of high National Insurance contributions on future generations, the Government's Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" stated yesterday.

The scheme, which will provide half-pay pensions for those on average earnings, will be retained for men over 50 and for women over the age of 45.

But for those below that age it will be phased out, with existing entitlements preserved, and National Insurance contributions will be reduced.

It will be replaced by compulsory occupational or personal pension schemes to which both employers and employees will be required to contribute.

The minimum contribution to the occupational pension will be four per cent. of earnings, with the employer being required to meet at least half the contributions.

The basic State pension remains unchanged and transitional arrangements will be made for the middle-aged as the switch to occupational pensions is introduced.

Special enhancement

Men aged 40 to 49 and women aged 35 to 44 will be given a special 'enhancement' of their rights to the State earnings-related pension.

The effect will be that they will be given a bonus in addition to any occupational pension they are building up.

As the earnings-related pension is phased out the present two-tier system of National Insurance contributions—contracted-in and contracted-out rates—will be abolished.

There will eventually be only one common rate of National Insurance contributions which will be about 16½ p.c. (taking employers' and employees' contributions together) compared with the current rate of 19·45 p.c.

This common rate of contributions will apply to all employees except those remaining wholly within the earnings-related pension scheme. They, and their employers, will continue to pay contributions at about the present rates.

Decade of retirement

The Green Paper does not propose any change in the age of retirement but it is to invite public discussion on the idea of a "decade of retirement" between the age of 60 and 70.

The timing of retirement would be a matter of personal choice with a lower pension for those who retired early and an enhanced pension for those who stayed on until the maximum age.

Many more pensioners

Three reasons are given for the need to abolish the earnings related pension — SERPS. They are:

Demography: The number of pensioners is expected to rise from 9·5 million in 1985 to 13·2 million in 2035 but the number of people of working age paying National Insurance contributions will stay the same.

The result, according to the Government Actuary's estimates, is that the ratio of 2·3 contributors to each pensioner in 1985 will become 1·6 contributors to each pensioner in 2035.

Bill would be tripled

Cost: Spending on pensions currently costs £15·4 billion but this will triple to £45 billion by 2033 if pensions are uprated in line with prices or to £65 billion if uprated in line with earnings.

"What this means is that the additional cost of SERPS itself would pre-empt state social security resources to this form of pension provision for 40 years to come."

'There is no fund'

Two Nations in Retirement: Only half the working population at present have the chance of an occupational pension scheme. The proposals will extend this opportunity to 11 million people without an occupational scheme.

The document stresses that there is no money building up to pay SERPS pensions when the scheme matures at the turn of the century, 20 years after it was introduced.

"The 20-year postponement of the full implementation of the scheme had nothing to do with building up a fund: there is no fund.

"The postponement was based on the hope that the scheme could be afforded in 1998 and go on being afforded thereafter.

"This hope was based on the assumption that the rate of unemployment would be 2½ p.c. and that the growth in real earnings would be 3 p.c. a year.

"Although solutions may differ, there are few who would now defend those assumptions; and even fewer who would say with confidence that the commitment can be met."

The Government believes its role should be to concentrate on providing as good a basic pension as possible while encouraging others to provide additional pensions for as many of the population as possible.

"It is right for us to sustain a basic level of pension provision, organised by the state, and paid for at the time by the working population.

"But to leave the large extra bill involved in SERPS to the coming generations would, in the Government's view be irresponsible."

The changes announced in the Green Paper will link with existing Government proposals to end frozen pensions for employees who change jobs.

Legislation is also before Parliament to give job-changers the right to have their pension valued so that it can be put into a new employer's scheme or into a personal pension.

Far-reaching changes in insurance system

BOTH THE Maternity Grant and the Death Grant are to be abolished and widows are to be given a lump sum of £1,000 instead of the current weekly allowance under far-reaching changes in the National Insurance system.

The Government says it was right when National Insurance first started to provide State insurance for the contingencies of birth and death.

"But in the 1980s this is something which the Government believe can properly be dealt with—and is now being dealt with—almost entirely by individual provision, or in the case of funeral expenses through insurance."

Death grant

Death Grant, unchanged over many years at £30, is said to be "hopelessly inadequate" to meet the cost of a funeral which can often exceed £600.

The present system is also unfair because extra help on top of the £30 is only available to those on supplementary benefit whereas low-income families in work may also need help.

The grant is also criticised because it takes 700 people to administer payments with the result that each £30 grant costs £20 to administer.

It will be abolished and anyone responsible for paying for a funeral who cannot meet the cost will be able to apply for help to the new Social Fund.

Maternity grant

MATERNITY GRANT, worth £25, is similarly criticised as inadequate to meet maternity costs and is also unfair because it is only expectant mothers on supplementary benefit who can receive extra help.

The grant will be replaced with a higher lump sum, probably £75, available under the Social Fund to low income families whether employed or unemployed.

MATERNITY ALLOWANCES, which replaces earnings whes women give up work to have a baby, will continue to be paid but entitlement will be based on a test of regular recent employment rather than the present complex contribution conditions which often relate to a period up to two years previously.

System to be computerised

The Green Paper says that all these changes will be carried through by the introduction of a computerised social security system.

It promises that by the 1990s social security offices will look quite different from now. The endless rows of filing cabinets with their bulky files will largely disappear.

"In their place will be visual display units linked to central computers, allowing staff to deal quickly and accurately with claims and inquiries."

The change will be achieved by the biggest computerisation programme in Europe. A new social security management board will be created and there will be moves towards better links between tax and benefits.

Starting in 1987 benefits will be uprated in April rather than November as at present. The change to April is being made so that benefit upratings will co-incide with changes in taxation.

In preparation for this change the uprating due in November 1986 will be brought forward to July 1986. Following the next uprating in November there will therefore be two increases at eight month intervals before the new annual pattern of April upratings begins.

The Green Paper concluded: "The Government believe that the outcome of this extensive review of social security will be a system of benefits which will reflect modern needs.

"Resources will be better targetted, incentives will be improved and the scheme will be considerably easier to understand and administer.

"Together with the plans now moving ahead for computerising social security, the reforms set out in this Green Paper will produce a more efficient and effective system which will carry us forward into the next century."

IN FOUR VOLUMES

The Green Paper "Reform of Social Security," is contained in four volumes costing a total of £26·20 and available through the Stationery Office.

Some benefits 'shrouded in obscurity'

THE Green Paper, described by Mr Fowler, Social Services Secretary, as the result of the most fundamental examination of the social security system since the war, opens with the dramatic words: "To be blunt, the British social security system has lost its way."

It says that the benefits system has become so complex that the service to the public often fails as staff hunt for files in a Dickensian paper chase.

"Forty years of tinkering have resulted in such complexity and confusion that some benefits are shrouded in an obscurity which at times is virtually total."

The Green Paper says there is no question that the social security system has helped to raise the living standards of the poorest people, but its achievements have to be weighed against a number of other factors.

The cost this year will be more than £40 billion but despite continually mounting costs, benefits have not always been directed to those most in need.

Impossible to understand

"The piecemeal development of the system has resulted in a multitude of benefits with overlapping purposes and differing entitlement conditions.

"The complexity in benefit rules has meant that social security is difficult to administer and at times impossible for the public to understand.

"While the overlap between social security and income tax means that significant numbers of people are paying income tax and receiving means-tested benefits at the same time."

The Green Paper emphasises that in future the Government will follow the basic principle that social security is not a function of the State alone but a partnership between the individual and the State.

Social security is already by far the largest Government programme. It costs more than twice that of defence spending and is larger than health, social services, education and housing put together.

It is responsible for a major share of the current heavy tax burden on individuals and companies. Continued growth of this burden could severely damage the prospects for economic growth.

"While it is one of the functions of the social security system to help those who are unemployed, it is self-defeating if it creates barriers to the creation of jobs, to job mobility or to people rejoining the labour force.

"Clearly such obstacles exist if people believe themselves better off out of work than in work, or if employers regard the burden of national insurance as a substantial discouragement to providing new jobs."

Millstone warning

Detailing the extent of the social security system it says that 81,000 staff are employed administering it with a further 26,000 in the Department of Employement administering unemployment benefit and 7,800 employed in local authorities on housing benefits.

Over 100 million giro-cheques and 55 million order books are issued each year. A total of 16 million new claims to benefit are made each year and another 20 million existing awards are reviewed.

Looking to the future, the Green Paper says that social security will remain an essential part of our society helping those who cannot support themselves by their own efforts.

But it warns: "The cost of social security must not be allowed to become a millstone preventing the general economic improvement on which the real alleviation of poverty depends."

The Government accept that a wholly means-tested approach to social security—including pensions and child benefit—would concentrate help on those who need it most.

But it says this approach would, by discouraging self-help and reducing incentives, undermine the importance of individual provision.

"Nor, in the Government's view, would a system which provided no benefits as of right to pensioners or families with children be acceptable."

At the other extreme is the approach which called for better universal benefits paid to all regardless of their needs.

Role diminished

"Ths approach diminishes the role of the individual and further enhances the role of the State. It would increase the overall level of resources required by social security, pre-empt an even larger slice of public spending and increase taxation."

Criticising the existing system, the Green Paper says that in some circumstances an increase in earnings for a low-paid family can sometimes lead to a small loss in net income because of increased tax and reduced benefits.

This was because the social security system was not well-co-ordinated with the income tax system and the Government wished to see closer links between them.

"Entitlement to income-related benefits for low-income working families will in future explicitly allow for the amounts of tax being paid.

"One consequence of this proposal is that the worst features of the poverty trap will be removed and another is that future increases in income tax allowance will reduce dependence on income-related benefits as well as taking families out of the tax net."

Widows' £1,000

Widows at present receive an allowance of £50.10 a week for the first six months of bereavement. This is to be replaced with a single payment of £1,000 paid immediately after the husband's death.

The widowed mother's allowance—worth £55.80 a week for widows with children—will start immediately on widowhood rather than six months later as at present.

But widows without children will not qualify for a widow's pension unless they are 45 or over. The changes are being introduced because two-thirds of all married women with children over school age now go to work and over half of widows aged 40 to 60 have a job.

Family credits to give extra aid for those in greatest need

A COMPLETELY new system of benefits to replace Family Income Supplement, Supplementary Benefit and the present highly complex Housing Benefit together with a new "safety net" fund are announced.

A host of special additions to the present supplementary benefit payments will be swept away in an attempt to make benefits easy to understand by recipients and staff alike.

The special additions will be replaced by different rates of benefit for families with children, pensioners, the long-term sick and disabled and lone parents.

In addition to achieving greater simplicity, the changes are designed to end the poverty trap (whereby a pay rise makes people worse off because of consequent loss of benefits) by assessing future benefits on net income, not gross pay.

A completely new Social Fund is to be set up to enable cash to be paid promptly, on a discretionary basis, to claimants who face a sudden emergency or who find themselves in exceptional circumstances.

The Green Paper gives no indication of what the new levels of state payments may be, but it says that savings will be made in the current £3,748 million a year cost of Housing Benefit.

FAMILY CREDIT

FAMILY CREDIT, which is among the new benefits being created, will replace the existing Family Incomes Supplement, which is said to be unsatisfactory because working families, particularly those with older children, could often find themselves worse then if they were unemployed.

The object of the new benefit will be to provide extra support to these families in accordance with their needs and to ensure as far as possible that they are better off in work.

"It's objective will also be to see that they can achieve improvements in family income by greater effort without losing all the benefit because of high marginal tax rates."

To make employees aware of the full extent of the help they are receiving, the credit will be paid by employers through the pay packet.

Children of families receiving family credit will not qualify for free school meals because the rates will provide extra cash help instead.

"Free school meals and free welfare foods will continue for those on income support but the low income scheme for welfare foods and local authority discretionary schemes for school meals will be ended."

The new Family Credit will "prevent families being worse off in work than unemployed, will put extra help in the pay packet and will reduce the worst disincentive effects of the poverty trap."

No changes are proposed in the £6·85 a week child benefit or in One-Parent Benefit. The Government rejects the idea that Child Benefit should be means tested or taxed.

"To do so would result in an unacceptable degree of 'churning' where the same people receive money through the benefit system and pay it back through the tax system.

"It would also go against the Government's belief that the responsibilities of all families with children should be recognised."

INCOME SUPPORT

INCOME SUPPORT is the name of the new benefit which will replace Supplementary Benefit, criticised by the Green Paper as too difficult for claimants to understand and too complex for staff to run.

In addition to long-term and short-term rates, supplementary benefit provides different payments for householders and non-householders and is augmented by additional payments for heating, diet, dependent children, laundry, clothing and even baths.

These payments will be abolished and income support will provide people "with a reasonable level of income which they will be respousible for managing as they wish.

"The system will not provide in detail for every variation in individual circumstances. Benefit will be determined essentially by age and family responsibilities, with extra allowances for a limited number of specific client groups.

"There will be a lower rate for those under 25 and a higher rate for pensioners. Families will receive a flat rate addition to the basic rate as well as age-related amounts for each child.

"Extra allowances will be payable to the long-term sick and disabled and to lone parents, reflecting their greater needs."

The current capital rule under which anyone with £3,000 or more savings is not entitled to any benefit will be relaxed to enable benefits to be paid to those with up to £6,000 capital although benefits will be at a reduced rate.

To encourage people to seek work, lone parents, disabled people and couples unemployed for more than two years will be allowed to earn up to £15 a week (at present £4) before their benefit is affected.

But expected changes in the earnings rules for pensioners have not been made. The Government says it wants to see how this first change works before deciding on further changes in the earnings rules.

SOCIAL FUND

THE SOCIAL FUND is to be administered by local DHSS offices so that help can be given quickly to those in genuine need. Staff will have discretion to give cash from an annual budget but the Green Paper gives no indication of how big that budget might be.

It says: "The replacement of supplementary benefit by the new income support scheme and the social fund will be the most important change in the safety net of support provided by the State since the 1930s. It will provide a simpler and more intelligible system, able to deal more effectively with genuine needs."

A hint is given that mortgage interest payments may not be so readily available on social security to those who are unemployed.

"The Government are concerned that the present system raises questions of fairness of treatment between those in and out of work, and can in particular be seen as a discouragement to owner - occupiers to return to work.

"We intend to discuss with the building societies and other interested bodies arrangements whereby less emphasis — particularly for claimants on benefit for short periods — is placed on help through the social security system."

HOUSING BENEFIT

HOUSING BENEFIT, at present paid to one in three households, will be greatly simplified and the amounts paid will be cut, although no indication is given of how much will be saved or where the cuts will fall.

The rules for entitlement to benefit are to be brought into line with those for the new Income Support scheme so that all households in receipt of income support, or at equivalent levels of income, will get the same level of help with their rent and rates.

Rents will continue to be fully paid for the poor but only 80 per cent. of the rates will be paid.

"The Government's view is that, while domestic rates continue to be a significant element of local authority spending, every household should be required to make some contribution towards them."

The Government is also to reconsider whether students can continue to claim supplementary benefit and housing benefit to "top-up" their grants.

"The Government believe it right in principle to return to the situation which existed before the introduction of supplementary benefit in 1966 with students being helped through the grant system by their families and by their own earnings in the vacation."

The Green Paper concludes this section by saying that the new Family Credit, the reformed Housing Benefit system and the new Income Support scheme will all operate on the same system of income testing.

"This will be based on net income and will allow more sensible treatment of capital resources than at present in order to retain the incentive to save.

"The Income Support scheme will give families who have been unemployed for a long period greater encouragement to keep in contact with the world of work by allowing a higher level of earnings before entitlement to support is reduced.

"The new system will do much to ensure that those in work but on low incomes are not disadvantaged compared with those who are out of work.

"By basing entitlements to all benefits on net income, the new arrangements will also mean that an increase in earnings will always lead to an increase in net income. The worst effects of the poverty trap that can exist now will therefore be avoided."

SOCCER 'GIVEN CHANCE TO RESTORE GOOD NAME'

By PETER PRYKE Parliamentary Correspondent

ENGLISH football clubs, by being banned from European competitions, had been given the opportunity to restore their good name and that of their supporters, Mrs THATCHER said in the Commons yesterday.

Describing the measures the Government intended to take and those she wanted the football authorities to implement, she said English clubs had been given the chance to convince other countries that effective measures to curb hooliganism had been introduced.

"There are no excuses for what happened in Brussels and we must not try to find any," she declared.

"*I believe we have the over*whelming majority of people behind us in taking rather sterner action than we might previously have thought necessary. I think people expect it to be taken now."

Mrs Thatcher's announcement that the Government planned to have legislation on the statute book banning alcohol in football grounds by the summer recess was given general support by Mr KINNOCK, the Labour Leader.

"We want to co-operate as much as possible with the legislation and other measures intended to combat hooliganism at football grounds and elsewhere," Mr Kinnock said.

But accusing the Prime Minister of treating the symp*toms of the sickness* only, he called for an inquiry into the causes of violent criminality.

He also criticised the Government for failing to promise adequate finance to the clubs to improve safety and security.

Membership cards

Rejecting the call for an inquiry into the causes of violence, Mrs THATCHER said that had been the subject of "books and books, papers and papers, and courses and courses.

"It has not found the answer and it never will."

Mrs Thatcher made clear her wish that football clubs should introduce a system of membership cards for their supporters, partly as an aid to identifying troublemakers in the crowd.

Before the Brussels tragedy the Football Association had been resistant to the idea, or that of a national card, she said. She would "do her utmost" at her next meeting with the F A to persuade them that at any rate a club membership card was necessary.

Reporting on the Government's reaction to the disaster at the European Cup final in Brussels last week, the Prime Minister said that she could not pre-judge the outcome of the inquiries being carried out by the Belgian authorities and the Union of European Football Associations.

"But we have to recognise that there has been a terrible record of violence at European football matches, in which I regret to say that English supporters have played a large part over many years."

First the Government would introduce legislation making it an offence to be drunk or to possess alcohol on football coaches, on entry to grounds and in most areas of grounds.

It would also be an offence to be in possession of containers which could be used as missiles. It was intended to have the legislation passed in time for the coming football season.

"We shall proceed next session with the legislation envisaged in the Government's White Paper on the review of public order.

"The proposals on assemblies in the open air will considerably strengthen the powers available to the police to guard against the risk of disorder.

"Wherever they have reason to expect disorder at a football match the police will, in effect, be able to limit the gate and impose other conditions.

"Under this provision, the police should be able to stipulate whatever steps they judge neces*sary to minimise the risk of dis*order.

"Mr Justice Popplewell will continue with his inquiry into the events at Bradford City and Birmingham football grounds on May 11. His terms of reference are already wide enough to allow any lessons learned from Brussels to be taken into account.

Closed circuit TV

"I understand that Mr Justice Popplewell hopes to submit an interim report before the beginning of next season.

"The procedure for designa*tion under the Safety of Sports* Grounds Act of all clubs in the Third and Fourth Divisions has been set in hand.

"We have, in addition, agreed with the football authorities on a number of *measures including the accel*eration of the introduction of closed circuit television, with the help of the Football Trust.

"I have been informed today that the Trust is proposing to allocate £500,000 for this purpose as a first step.

"This would give cover in 30 grounds in addition to the 11 in which experiments are already taking place.

"Events at Brussels last week have, however, made it clear that more is now needed. I shall be discussing urgently with the football authorities proposals for:

The introduction of a practical scheme of membership cards, either on a club or national basis.

Proposals for far more all-ticket matches.

Stricter controls, or in some cases a ban, on visiting spectators.

"I recognise that such measures would mean a radical change in the way in which football is conducted in this country. But radical change is needed if football is to survive as a spectator sport."

'Limited' response

Mr KINNOCK said that some of the revenue taken out of football should be returned in terms of improved safety and security at grounds.

"The proposals we have heard so far don't begin to match the scale of crisis in British football." Response could not be limited solely to punishment and policing.

"We need action to identify and deal with the causes of hooliganism and the breakdown of behaviour in society. We want the thugs caught and punished and in addition it is essential to discover not only who has committed the crimes but also why."

There should be a thorough investigation involving the police, youth and social workers.

Mrs THATCHER said considerable finance was already going into football, from the pools promoters and television.

"We are prepared to allocate more should the result of the committee co-ordinating financial assistance for football make it necessary."

An inquiry into crime and hooliganism could go on for years and find as many answers as there were people on it.

"There is violence in human nature and there are only three ways of dealing with it—either persuasion, prevention or punishment. We shall try to operate all three."

Mr ERIC HEFFER (Lab. Walton) said the time had come to face up to political elements which had been involved at football matches. These groups needed to be isolated and rooted out.

He criticised the Brussels stadium as being unsuitable and the Belgian police for insufficent action to deal with the immediate outbreak. What had happened should not be used in an attempt to undermine civil liberties.

Mrs THATCHER, identifying soccer hooliganism as the major cause of trouble, said: "It is appalling that supporters of one club cannot stand by the supporters of another club without there being fear of violence.

"That used not to be true at football or any other sport in this country. It is that we must try to eradicate."

Severe penalties

Mr JOHN CARLISLE (C. Luton N), expressing disappointment at the Prime Minister's list of measures to be taken, said he had listened in vain for severe penalties for hooligans.

Nothing had been said about imposing on them the physical pain they so readily put on others.

Mrs THATCHER said severe penalties were available and the Court of Appeal had indicated that severe crimes of this nature should in general meet with prison sentences.

"Recent events will probably mean that heavier sentences are meted out and that would be absolutely right."

Mr KENNETH WARREN (C., Hastings and Rye) said he would place before Ministers evidence that there had been totally inadequate policing at the Brussels match and that Belgian police officers had been selling tickets outside the stadium at random before the match.

FRIENDLY MATCH PLEA BY BISHOP

The Bishop of NORWICH appealed on the Lords yesterday for Government help to enable a friendly pre-season football match between Norwich City and the Italian team Juventus to go ahead in Norwich in August as planned.

The Bishop, the Rt Rev. Maurice Wood, said: "I believe it could be a deeply healing experience and could do much to restore the level of our great national game and heal the shame and disgrace which brought it into disrepute."

Fowler package attacked

By WILLIAM WEEKES
Parliamentary Staff

THE Government's consultative document on major changes to the social security system was a monument to six harsh years of Thatcherite rule, Mr MICHAEL MEACHER, Shadow Social Services Secretary, declared in the Commons yesterday.

Mourning this "black day for the people of Britain," Mr Meacher denounced the statement in which Mr Fowler, Social Services Secretary, outlined the proposals as representing the reintroduction of Victorian values with invidious distinctions between the deserving and undeserving poor.

The Conservatives, while expressing some reservations, generally welcomed a package which Opposition M Ps described as the price the poor and weak were having to pay for the Government's economic failure.

Mr FOWLER pointed out that the cost of the social security system now accounted for more than 30 per cent. of all public spending, and the pressure for growth in spending had not ended.

"We must ensure now that we have a soundly-based social security system which the country can afford."

'Fair' proposals

The present system of social security did not always help those most in need and a major priority of the review had been to make better provision to meet the needs of poor families with children.

Rejecting the Opposition's strictures, Mr Fowler said his proposals were fair to the public and fair to the recovery of the economy.

But Mr MEACHER argued that pensioners and the unemployed would suffer a net loss of at least £1,000 million a year if the plans were implemented, even before the "huge losses" arising from abolition of the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme began.

"The main beneficiaries will be the rich who will receive even bigger tax handouts in future Tory budgets," he said.

Welcoming the "limited reprieve" for SERPS, Mr Meacher said it was patently clear that the Government lost its nerve after its original intention had been made clear in repeated leaks.

But the longer-term abolition of SERPS was still a betrayal of the unequivocal pledge Mrs Thatcher had given three weeks before the last General Election, when she said there were no plans to change the earnings related component of the State pension.

Mr MEACHER: Main beneficiaries will be the rich.

Millions who would have enjoyed dignity and security in retirement would be forced down into poverty, Mr Meacher said.

Mr FOWLER criticised Mr Meacher's reaction as "typically hysterical." he said that assumptions made by the then Labour government when SERPS was introduced, including forecasts of the number of pensioners, had not proved sound.

Pressed by Mr MICHAEL FOOT, the former Labour Leader, who accused the Government of imposing cuts and extra means tests on some of the country's poorest people, Mr FOWLER said it was not possible at this stage to give a detailed analysis of costs and savings on the social security budget.

Major savings

The major savings would be the long-term savings in the next century resulting from phasing out SERPS. Changes in the structure of supplemen*tary benefit* were not intended to reduce the overall help provided.

The Green Paper made clear that the Government expected spending on housing benefit to be eventually reduced by about £500 million a year.

Mr ARCHIE KIRKWOOD (Lib., Roxburgh and Berwickshire) said there was a tendency towards moving away from the Beveridge system of welfare for all to a service exclusively for the poor, that would be a wrong direction to take.

Sir DAVID PRICE (C., Eastleigh) urged the need for greater flexibility in the retirement age and equality of treatment for men and women.

Mr ANDREW BOWDEN (C., Brighton, Kemptown) spoke of grave concern among pensioners who had seen the value of their savings destroyed. He said they must not be worse off under Mr Fowler's proposals.

By ANTHONY LOOCH

MR BRITTAN was accused by a Labour M P in the Commons yesterday of giving credence to the "crude racism expressed by some of the gutter Press and certain Tory backbenchers" over the problem of the Tamil refugees to Britain.

The attack came from the Left-wing M P Mr DAVID NELLIST (Coventry SE) about the Home Secretary had made a statement about the measures he had taken to deal with the Tamil problem.

Another Labour M P, Mr MAX MADDEN (Bradford W), said it was shameful that the Home Secretary, whose own family had sought refuge in Britain, should now have slammed the door in the face of people from a Commonwealth country who were doing the same thing.

Mr BRITTAN replied: "Your personal references are wholly inaccurate but I would not think that you were worried about that."

Earlier Mr Brittan told the Commons that he had found it necessary to reduce the "influx into Britain of Tamils who had expressed a fear of returning to Sri Lanka.

Consequently, he had imposed a visa requirement for Sri Lankan citizens which had come into effect on May 30.

"The imposition of a visa requirement will not prevent the entry of those Sri Lankan citizens who qualify for admission in the normal way, for example as visitors or students, although they will have to obtain visas before travelling," said the Home Secretary.

Mr Brittan said the position of all Tamil's who had arrived recently would continue to be considered individually.

Two traditions

"Where an application for asylum was refused, there would be an opportunity for the United Kingdom Immigration Advisory Service or the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to consider the case, and representations from M Ps would continue to be considered.

"It was only with great reluctance that I decided that it was necessary to impose a visa requirement on a fellow Commonwealth country, the need for it will be kept under review and I hope it can be lifted in due course," Mr Brittan added.

The Opposition's chief race relations spokesman, Mr ALFRED DUBS (Lab., Battersea) said Mr Brittan's statement marked a departure from two important British traditions.

For the first time, citizens from a Commonwealth country would require a visa to enter Britain. The second tradition which had been breached was the one of offering a haven and hospitality to refugees.

Mr TERRY DICKS (C., Hayes and Harlington) said many of his constituents were concerned that any Tamils had been allowed into Britain.

People throughout Britain felt that enough was enough in this area, considering the problems of unemployment and the strain on the social services which Britain was already facing.

Lords appeal

In the Lords, Lord MISHCON (Lab.) called for compassionate treatment for Tamils already here, to allow them to stay at least until they were satisfied they could return home in safety.

TELEVISION / Bodyline

A sticky wicket

THE opening exchanges in this week's five-day test of audience endurance otherwise known as Bodyline (B B C-2) did not bode well for those who have rashly booked tickets for the duration.

Play was too often irritatingly bogged down by laborious deliveries trundled down an unimaginative line and a leaden commentary.

Which was a pity because the issue behind the Australian-made series, the bodyline bowling tactics used by England's captain, Douglas Jardine, to win the 1932-33 Tests against Australia, rocked the two nations and apparently made Jardine the most hated man ever to set foot in Australia.

To see it from the colonial angle Down Under, potentially rich in observation about the imperial British, should, it was to be hoped, prove revelatory.

Instead the series showed how difficult it is for foreigners to convincingly imitate the English ruling classes, which is surprising considering how often they are guyed.

Attempts to enact the scenes of Jardine's youth in India resembled less the stiff upper lip of the British Raj than a self-conscious avoidance of the drift into strine, which occasionally happened thus invalidating all previous pukka efforts and disastrously undermining the willing suspension of our disbelief.

The Nottingham mining background of Harold Larwood, admirably impersonated by Jim Holt, presented no such problem. Nor did the boozy-free-and-easy cricketing world of the young Aussie hero, Don Bradman.

But, with its crude interpolation of lengthy explanations of the rules of cricket, presumably introduced for the benefit of non-cricketers but only likely to alienate them for life, the series seems unlikely to create the tension, the subtlety and coherence that can make the five-day game so addictive.

In another part of Britain's Commonwealth, a Granada Television team has been assembling a devastating indictment of the negligence that caused the immediate deaths of 2,500 when gas leaked from the Union Carbide pesticide plant in Bhopal.

The results, shown in last night's World in Action (I T V) under the title "The Betrayal of Bhopal," was, not surprisingly, made with precious little help from Union Carbide itself.

The plant's three safety systems were similar to those in Union Carbide's American factory but in Bhopal's case on the day of the disaster were either turned off to save a mere £50 a day or out of order.

While almost preferring not to hear the declaration of one safety expert that the world was full of inherently dangerous plants, one was hard put not to share the view of the Indian observer who deduced that the disaster had happened in India because life there is regarded as "rather cheap."

RADIO / Mummy talk

YOU go from the shimmering heat down a long ramp and bend over double at the low door. Inside the burial chambers of the kings of Egypt there are stars carved into the ceilings and a life's story in hieroglyphs on the walls. The vault into which the mummy was placed is of thick black basalt, floated on the river from the Sudan, cold to the touch. I saw all that two weeks ago. On Saturday night, Radio 4 took me (via Manchester) to the secrets of the mummified bodies themselves. Science Now, presented by Colin Tudge, and produced by Deborah Cohen, was all about Egyptian mummies, what they tell us, and how we find it out.

Scientists in Manchester, where mummies are big, can tell us from their study all sorts of things about what life was like along the Nile 5,000 years ago. They had the same sort of bodily pests as still exist. Their dental problems were ferocious with evidence of abcesses and sand in every bite. Whether they were really the natives of the area or a fusion of two cultures is still open to debate but the search for the identification of their genes continues.

The great test of the catholicity of Radio 4 is that it can turn up something to do with whatever exotic expedition you may have made since you last heard it. Out of the ether I listened to this and, through it, saw again the carvings of owls and herons in the cool rock. I also understood them better.

As these are hard times for commercial radio it cheered me up to hear LBC, the London news station, putting out an adaptation of The Experiences of an Irish R.M. It features the cast from the Channel 4 television version (and a wonderful cast it is, with Peter Bowles, Anna Manahan, Brian Murray and all) and Nick Bicat's excellent and evocative music.

Michael Bartlett, who directed, and Aidan Day, who produced, have not just given us the watered down version. We who have taken our Somerville and Ross at the knee of the BBC would not swallow that. Given, however, such good performances, so rich a production and such faith to the heart of the text those of us who can hear it should be busy counting our considerable blessings while those who cannot should lobby their nearest ILR immediately to make good the breach.

Friday's Any Questions? (Radio) made history of one sort by having a Cabinet Minister appear for the first time and of another by having that Minister, Mr. Michael Heseltine, agree with Labour's rising star of Brent, Mr Ken Livingstone. The fact that neither actually said anything a wise old aunt might not have predicted otherwise made, as might be expected, little difference to the overall drama of the occasion.

ART / Polish prints

THE EXHIBITION "Polish Architectural Heritage In Graphic Arts" at the Polish Cultural Institute (34 Portland Place) is, on two levels, wonderfully informative about Poland. It also with the work of Leon Wyczolkowski presents one of the finest of late 19th-century print makers, who lived on until 1936.

On view until June 24 are 50 prints, ranging in date from circa 1820 to 1945, by 19 artists. They come from the collection of the National Museum in Kielca.

Not only are we reminded of the appearances of Cracow, Warsaw, Lublin, Sandomierz and many other cities and towns, not to mention houses in the country, of Poland, but we are also introduced to a complex architectural tradition.

Architecture in Poland has been influenced by many other lands, and buildings have been erected in an almost bewildering number of styles. To the obvious emulation of things French and Italian we can in this exhibition add such things as the "Egyptian" temple at Slubico.

Among Polish artists active in the early years of this century, Leon Wyczolkowski had a comparably, indeed, extraordinary, wide range. His achievements were, however, based upon his powers as a draughtsman and those are well illustrated by his prints in this exhibition.

His interior of the Church of Our Lady in Cracow conveys a striking illustration of detail while, at the same time, suggesting the space within the building. Few artists have succeeded as well as did Wyczolkowski in combining the rendering of detail, in his case with meticulous accuracy, with the ability to capture the atmosphere of particular buildings.

MUSIC / James Campbell

THE music from some G L C jamboree on the South Bank penetrated into the Queen Elizabeth Hall on Sunday evening bidding fair to spoil an absorbing concert by James Campbell and the Allegri Quartet. The paltry programme sheet was hardly calculated to put one in a better mood. Ridiculous hyperbole about Mr Campbell failed to inform us of his nationality or tell us anything of his curriculum vitae and the Allegri themselves had omitted their individual names.

But Mr Campbell, presumably a Canadian, made us forget such aggravating incidentals by his superbly crafted clarinet playing. Though a total virtuoso of the instrument, he subordinated his immaculate technique entirely to the needs of the music in hand.

In Brahm's Quintet, his liquid, unfettered tone, ideal legato and sensitive attendance to dynamic contrast led to a highly charged account of the work, in which both its autumnal warmth and moments of dramatic élan, in particular the gipsy-like episode in the slow movement, were indelibly encompassed. The interpretation owed much of its intimate, yielding characteristic to the equally refined playing of the Allegri who obviously have a close rapport with Mr Campbell.

Weber's Quintet in the second half was lighter fare, but it only went to confirm the soloist's complete mastery. The Fantasia is the most eloquent movement here, and the players responded to its needs for a romantically inclined profile modified by classical restraint.

On their own, the Allegri found the concentrated tension of Tippett's Fourth Quartet, suggesting the positive feeling in each section of this one-movement work while allowing us to appreciate the unity and inter-relationships of the whole, only once or twice wanting an extra sense of inner feeling.

Alan Blyth

Pascal Rogé

JUST as the St Louis Orchestra's performance of Dvorak's Eighth Symphony the other week was peppered with unexpected mortar effects from a G L C firework display on top of the hall, so the greater part of Pascal Rogé's recital at the Queen Elizabeth Hall on Sunday afternoon was backed by the dull thud and amplified vocalising of some pop-music extravaganza taking place immediately outside on the enbankment.

It was a thoughtless intrusion, revealing as much crassness of planning as it did insensitivity to the artist and lack of consideration to the audience which had actually paid to hear him.

For all that, though Mr Rogé's performance of Beethoven's C minor Sonata, Op.111, managed to assert itself as one of intellectual depth and rhetorical strength, one in which he applied a weighty tone and thoughtful articulation to a reading of intricately crafted detail but at the same time breadth of structural perception.

His group of Bach Inventions was less idiomatically convincing, dogged as it was by an unyielding, mechanical regularity and monochromatic tone-colouring which failed to find much to say about the music. Nor were his Brahms Ballades from Op 10 able to do much more than scratch the emotional surface, but in Berg's Op. 1 Sonata the playing took wing in a passionate, spontaneously responsive reading which delved deep into its enigmatic melodic and harmonic inflections and crystallised its heady atmosphere.

PERSONAL VIEW

How Mrs Thatcher made history

ALFRED SHERMAN considers the difficulties in the path of the political reformer

AS Margaret Thatcher enters her seventh year as Prime Minister and eleventh as party leader, the image increasingly projected of her is of an omnipotent presidential figure who has eliminated almost all opposition inside her government and brought the Civil Service into line by politicised appointments.

Yet—as a reflective B B C Radio Four series on "The Thatcher Phenomenon" reminded us—an equal and opposite picture presents itself of a leader who has been frustrated in her reforming zeal by a party which shares only some of her views and little of her will, and by machinery of government originally designed to do quite other things.

By the nature of human society, reform always encounters resistance, and that the more institutions stand in need of reform, the greater their resistance.

Radical reformers tend to be more painfully aware of the difficulties and ingrained conservatism in their own times than of difficulties which earlier reformers successfully surmounted. But there is a special problem which contemporary reformers must grapple with. It is now necessary to reverse the direction which reformers took with the best of intentions during the epoch we are seeking to bring to an end. Many generations of reformers have been in the happy position of being able to build on their predecessors' work, whereas we are as often as not thwarted by them.

Since the 1870s the scope of the State in this country has expanded inexorably. The minimal State, which developed after the ousting of the Stuarts in favour of constitutional monarchy with its inherently limited powers, was replaced by the omnipotent State as sovereign Parliamentary government flexed its muscles.

But whereas earlier interventionary epochs, e.g. absolute monarchy and mercantilism, had been unpopular, since they subordinated individual welfare to State power, and economic consideration to military and dynastic ones, the past 100 years of State intervention has enjoyed considerable popular backing.

Only in recent years has there been any perceptible turning of the tide, and it has a long way to go before it becomes a torrent. But even this tide has proved difficult to harness. The machinery of government, which for all practical purposes includes schools and universities, broadcasting oligopolies, and a whole network of nominally voluntary bodies which enjoy State subvention or privilege, is predicated to expansion, not to pruning, let alone contraction.

The whole system of a career Civil Service, which seemed such an unqualified boon when introduced, has a momentum of its own and creates a climate of ideas favourable to State expansion. Where political weight and direction is concerned, this Civil Service includes quangoes, universities and schools, the staff of most nationalised industries, all those with security of tenure whose income derives from taxation or State-granted monopoly (or monopsony) powers.

But State-dependency goes far beyond those who are formally part of the public sector. Much of the nominally private sector is actually dependent on the State, whether as customer, source of subsidies, or protector against foreign competition.

The part played by B L's suppliers in politically blackmailing successive Governments into pouring large sums of public money into the bottomless pit is well known. But the phenomenon is far wider spread.

Building and civil engineering contractors depend for much of their work on Government contracts, and the producers of building materials and equipment in turn depend on them. Manufacturers of railway equipment who lobby for B R, suppliers to the nationalised shipbuilding industry, defence contractors, suppliers to the N H S, schools and universities, the high proportion of professionals who are now employed or instructed by central and local government, all ensure that a sizeable proportion of the nominally private sector has become an extension of the State sector by other means.

During our lifetime, economics has turned from a speculative and historical pursuit, often geared to warning against the counter-productive nature of intervention, into a technique of governance whose raison d'etre is interventionist. Your classicist might warn against the dangers of any positive course of action, given unknowns, hazards and past contretemps; your economist tends towards activism as justification for his craft.

The trade unions have been absorbed into this alliance against progress. Their organic links with the Labour party and commitment to State-socialist ideas are part of the reason. Though they play at class warfare, they are mainly in the business of defending an outmoded status quo against change, and seek allies where ever they can find them.

To break through these inter*locking institutional* and intellectual thickets in order to induce self-sustaining change, and to turn whole groups round, with only an eclectic philosophy built from fragments surviving from earlier ones, requires great faith, strategic vision and tactical skills. The great wonder is that anything has been achieved at all. Yet, as Adam Smith assured us, there seems to be a great force in human nature which frequently repairs the ravages caused by institutional folly.

I think that historians will see the first Thatcher decade as exciting, and it was a privilege to have been involved.

Eating habits getting healthier, says survey

THE British are changing their traditional eating habits and adopting a much more healthy diet, according to the latest Government figures.

Consumption of full milk, cream, red meat and fats declined, while we consumed more skimmed and semi-skimmed milk, fish, poultry, vegetables and fruit.

The National Food Survey Results for 1983, published today by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, show that the average family spent £34·16 on its weekly food bill, a rise of 6 per cent., or £1·92, over the previous year.

"Since the annual increase in prices was about 1 per cent. less than that in household food expenditure, and the implication is that there was a corresponding percentage increase in the real value of food purchases.

Consumption of liquid milk averaged 3·8 pints a week, compared to 3·95 pints the year before. Fewer houses now have regular doorstep deliveries and the percentage has fallen from 96 per cent. in 1982 to 94 per cent.

While sales of full cream milk have declined, sales of skimmed and semi-skimmed milk continue to increase. Average consumption of cheese rose to 4·01oz a person a week, compared to 3·8oz in 1982.

Downward trend

Consumption of beef, pork and lamb declined from 14·67oz a person a week to 13·97oz, the lowest level since 1973, although consumption of poultry is up, along with fish which topped 5·1oz, the highest level recorded since 1970.

There has been a "well established downward trend" in egg consumption, with people eating a naverage 3·53 eggs each a week while consumption of butter and margarine declined to 7·35oz a person a week. Consumption of sugar also declined from 10·31oz each a week to 9·84oz.

There were rises in the consumption of most types of fresh fruit and consumption of fruit juices reached record levels of 5·2 fluid ounces a person a week.

Although consumption of wholemeal bread rose total consumption of bread declined. However, consumption of cereals continued to increase.

STUDY OF HEART-RISK 'GEOGRAPHY'

By Dr K. C. HUTCHIN Medical Consultant

BRITAIN is a high-risk country for heart attacks. Twenty per cent. of middle-aged men have blood pressure levels that increase this risk and 60 per cent. of those have a twofold risk factor.

The average blood cholesterol level in this country is higher than most other countries.

At the launch of Heart Week '85 in London yesterday, the British Heart Foundation announced the award of nearly £250,000 to complete a research project being carried out by the British Regional Study Group, headed by Prof. Gerald Shaper, of the Royal Free Hospital.

Prof. Shaper said his team was investigating the striking geographic variations in death rates in Great Britain, and to determine the key factors responsible for heart attacks.

Some 8,000 middle-aked men in 24 towns in England, Wales and Scotland are being studied in order to relate risk factors such as blood pressure, smoking and cholesterol to environmental factors like water supply and the weather.

The object is to produce guideline for the reduction of risk of heart disease which kills 140,000 people under the age of 75 annually—more than all forms of cancer, chest trouble and accident.

With the launching of Heart Week '85, the British Heart Foundation announced a campaign to inform people of the size of the problem.

Mr John Wallwork, of the cardiac surgery team at Papworth Hospital, Cambridge, said of 396 donor hearts offered in 1984 only 104 could be accepted.

DRUG JAR FETCHES £18,000

By ALISON BECKETT Art Sales Correspondent

ENGLISH pottery and porcelain attracted high prices at Christie's in London yesterday topped by a drug jar estimated at £6,000-10,000 which went to an anonymous bid of £18,000.

Made in London about 1656, the 14-inch high Delft polychrome jar painted predominantly in blue with the arms of the Worshipful Society of Apothecaries was previously unrecorded and had a crack and a hole, both restored.

An Obadiah Sherratt group of Polito's Menagerie with his exotic birds and beasts, dated around 1830, was bought by European Antiques, the London dealers, for £15,000 similarly doubling expectations.

Rembrandt etchings

A small, 1755 Worcester wine funnel painted with an oriental holding a fan made £12,000; and Norwich Museum paid £8,000 for a Bristol Delft blue and white bowl, 1735, bearing the name of a local potter. The auction realised 259,460 with little unsold.

Phillips auction of Rembrandt etchings in London totalled £68,620 including £7,200 for a 1654 impression of "Christ returning from the Temple between His Parents." It measured less than four inches by six.

How history was made in the grand hotel

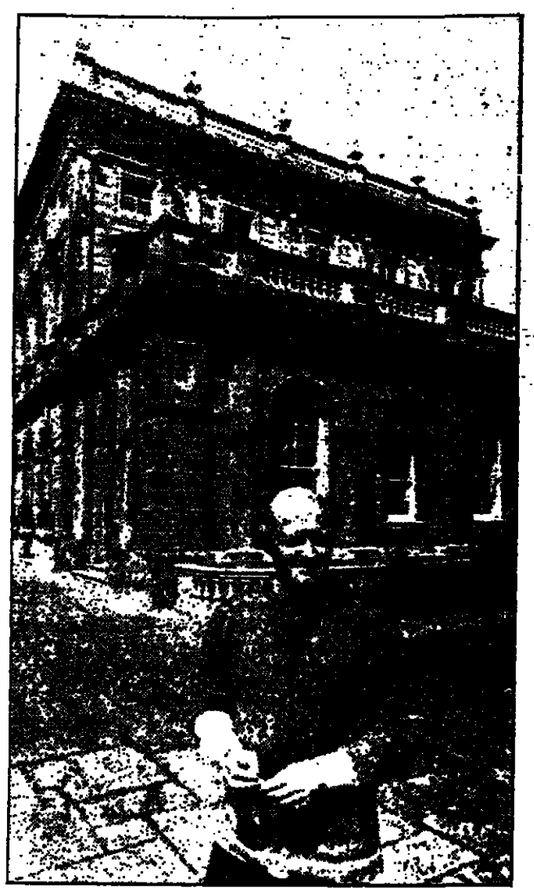
CLIVEDEN became a political and literary centrepiece in the period leading up to the First World War when Waldorf Astor lived there with his wife, the indefatigable Nancy, who was the first woman Member of Parliament.

They entertained the lions of the day and Henry James, Rudyard Kipling, Balfour, Curzon and Churchill were on their regular guest list.

In early December, Cliveden will be opening its doors to a new kind of guest when the house that was once serviced by six housemaids, six laundrymaids and with 40 or so gardeners tending the immaculate gardens, re-opens as an hotel.

Although the Astors continued to live at Cliveden, it was given to the National Trust in 1942. When the 3rd Lord Astor died in 1966, two years after his mother Nancy, Cliveden was leased by the Trust to Stanford University, California, in pursuance of the family's wishes that it be used "to bring about a better understanding between the English-speaking peoples."

I wonder what Nancy Astor would have thought of her home being turned into even the grandest of hotels? George Swain, who went to work at Cliveden when he was 14, remembers her as a great lady with a keen sense of humour and thinks she would have been delighted as she was "all for a bit of fun."



● Above: the fountain of love at Cliveden was made for the 1st Viscount Astor by Thomas Waldo Story, an American sculptor living in Rome.

He remembers the garden as a dangerous place to linger in the early morning, as her ladyship teed-off on the terrace 20ft above the garden.

The first Astors to live in Cliveden were rich enough to make all kinds of improvements to the house and garden. The 1st Viscount Astor's favourite period was the Italian Renaissance and he could afford to indulge his taste. He brought to Cliveden four 18th-century Italian stone figures from the Comedia dell-Arte, while the early 17th-century balustrade came from the gardens of the Villa Borghese in Rome, which the Italian government of the day tried to prevent being exported.

The monolithic edifice of the brick house that has been stuccoed to look like Bath stone, sits on a plateau above a wide sweep of the Thames, surveying its limitless horizons.

Apart from its classical, distinguished facade, it is a tank among houses. Architect William Bertram, who has been given the job of turning the Actor's home into an hotel, notes that: "Cliveden is well and massively built with civil engineering concepts holding the house together.

"Engineers were the gods of the period when Paxton had engineered the Crystal Palace."

With the National Trust approving every detail of its transformation into an hotel, Cliveden will undoubtedly be restored to every former glory. It is encouraging to hear that, far from dividing the house up like a cake into the largest number of portions, the elegant interior is to remain intact. The large bedrooms each had a spacious dressing room attached which are being turned into bathrooms.

"We have all read about how great houses were run at the turn of the century," comments Mr Bertram. "It is planned that the hotel will be run as a similarly courteous, well - mannered establishment."

Mr Bertram is an architectural classicist, of the school that is coming back into fashion. He works in Bath where, simply walking round the Circus or the Royal Crescent, gives him a sense of well-being that he likes to emulate in his buildings.

"I'm doing in Bath what John Wood was doing 200 years ago," he said. "Wood must have thought we'll do it like the Romans did. My attitude to Cliveden comes from working in Bath."

If all goes well, Mr Bertram's architectural sleights of hand will not be visible and Cliveden will appear to look as it always has, not suffering from that over-brightness and strained quality that often mars the pretensions of the newly-minted grand hotel.

Apart from his obsession with pediment, columns and balustrading, Mr Bertram is a radical thinker who once transformed a boring turn-of-the-century Austrian chalet built of Bath stone into a classical house by the simple expedient of building a new facade over the old one.

The contemporary manor house he designed for the Duke of Norfolk's daughter, Lady Herries, near Arundel was built of a redundant local building material, flint. "Majestic with a French flavour and an apse both ends," muses the innovative Mr Bertram.

Successful architecture he sees as giving the client the feeling that he is worth a million dollars: "Passages should be wider than the minimum and the interiors should be lavish in terms of space. When they designed this building they made the corridors 10ft. wide, so that there was room to pass a maid carrying a tray."

The art of moving around inside a building pleasantly is the one that intrigues Mr Bertram, a traditionalist who likes to work with the natural elements of stone, flint, wood and thatch to create a seamless vision of the past.

His greatest compliment was to be congratulated on a fine restoration: in fact, a new building given the invisibility of a vintage Bertram design.

Although Cliveden is closed to visitors while the conversion is in progress, the grounds, with their miles of wooded walks, remain open to the public.

When Cliveden re-opens as an hotel, the house will be open again for public viewing on a restricted basis. Cliveden House is at Taplow in Buckinghamshire.

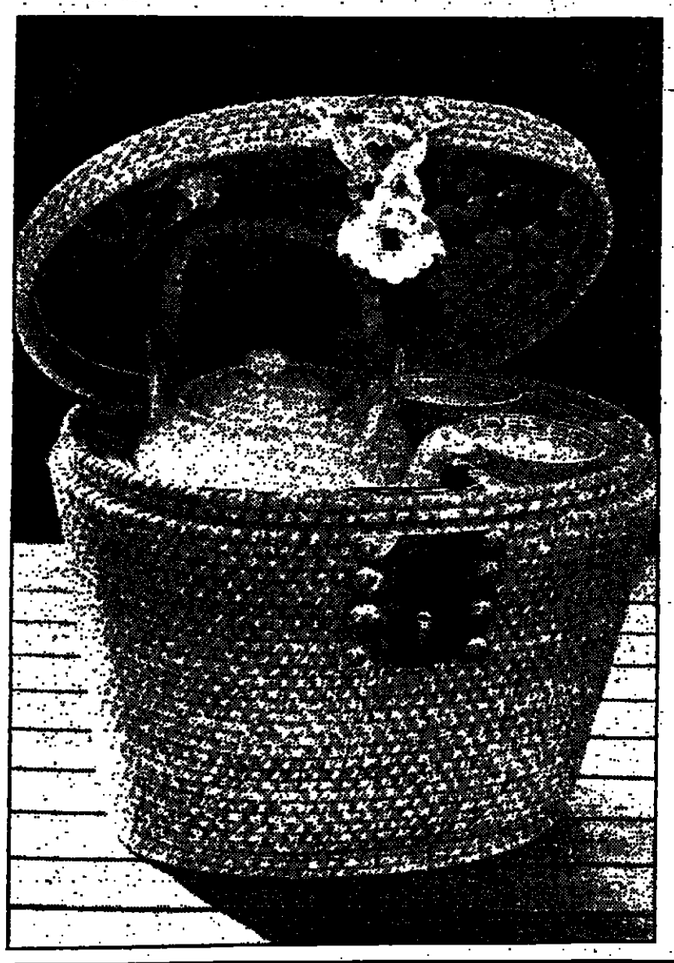
WHAT'S NEW

Making perfect preparations for the great outdoors...



NOW that it may be safe at last to think of eating in the garden, here is a line-up of some of the newest accessories designed to make life pleasanter out of doors.

Bodum's excellent range of glass and plastic accessories is widely available throughout the country while Dickins & Jones has an in-store Guzzini shop which stocks all the stylish ideas Italian designers have to offer. Branches of Littlewoods have an excellent collection of picnic and terrace accessories. PICTURED ABOVE: from left, wine cooler with strawberry design is part of a large range, £12·50 by Guzzini. Plastic goblet with tulip pattern and coloured stem, £2·99 the pair. Yellow mug, also in green, red and white, from the Patioware range, 99p each, from major Littlewoods branches. Bodum champagne flute glass with green plastic base for stability, 99p in a range of 8 colours, including chrome, at Dickins & Jones, Regent Street, London, W.1., which also sells the coffee maker, £8·50 and tea maker, £9·95 with the burner, £11·95.

LEFT: a Chinese picnic would include one of these tea baskets, fitted with depressions to take the tea making equipment. The tea basket costs £21·50; the white teapot with wicker handle, £7·50 and the "rice grain" cups, £1·22 each. They are all part of a new consignment from Neal Street East, 5 Neal Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.2.

I CAN'T have been alone in wishing that the generally available kitchen foil packs were sold in longer lengths. Now Alcan has made Bacofoil available in 30m lengths, perhaps the rest will follow; price £1·82 from supermarkets, including Asda.

☐ Boots Cookshops are increasingly good sources for cheap, sturdy cooking equipment of all kinds. The freezing and preserving sections stock useful things such as a large copper-based preserving pan which makes up to 5kg of jam or chutney at one time. They also sell sugar thermometers for those who like to take the guessing out of jam making: once the liquid reaches 104° C. the jam is ready for potting.

Other specialist equipment includes woks, simmer pots, deep pan pizza sets, asparagus and corn on the cob steamers and porringers which make excellent sauces as well as porridge.

☐ The paint box could prove to be an improvement on the paint tin, given that it should prevent the build up of a skin on the surface of the paint and that you can easily pour off as much as you need and no more through the spout.

Ashwells Paints has launched the new idea in white vinyl silk or vinyl matt emulsion. The 2·5 litre box costs about £4·95 and is available first in the North-West, the West and the Midlands through Texas Homecare, Focus Homecentres and Watkinson D I Y.

☐ Don't pass by the next branch of Texas Homecare without looking at the sharp prices they are offering for summer outdoors. The Bermuda gas barbecue which takes the skill out of lighting the charcoal is reduced in price from £118·99 to £49·99. The traditional Bali barbecue which can be wheeled into position and is sold complete with kebab skewers, costs £49·99 against a manufacturer's recommended price of £104·99.

There are cut-price motor mowers: Qualcast Suffolk Punch 12in cylinder petrol mower down to £164·99 (M R P £240·99) and a garden drinks trolley with a well for bottles for £19·99.

☐ Baby Love is the slightly nauseous name of a useful source for baby equipment of all kinds. Started by parents Steve and Greta Brenman who knew what they were looking for but couldn't find it, the mail order catalogue is full of bright, interesting and useful things.

In addition to the well-priced everyday items such as disposable nappies, which are delivered to the door free of carriage charge each month, there are inflatable potties, easy feeding aids, baby slings and baby bouncers.

There are folding high chairs, table and seat sets, travel cots and dresser units for keeping all baby's bits in one place. Write to Babylove Ltd., P O Box 187, Kingston-upon-Thames, Surrey KT2 5BJ for a catalogue.

WEAVING BACK DOWN THE CENTURIES

A COLOURFUL TALE OF HOW THE HUGUENOTS FLED, AND BROUGHT US THEIR DELICATE SKILLS...

THERE are not many companies who can trace their origins back 300 years but Toye, Kenning and Spencer can chart its "tree" back to 1685.

That was the year that Guillaume Henri Toye, a Huguenot weaver, fled to London, disguised as a cattle dealer to escape persecution by Louis XIV.

He went to live with his family in Hope Town (Bethnal Green today) where he wove silk, velvet, gold and silver laces for the gilded military uniforms of the day.

So it went on until 1793 when Charles, great grandson of the founder, started a factory in Camden. In 1835 William Toye broke away to found his own company, the same one that flourishes in the same business today.

Up to 50,000 Protestant refugees fled to England after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes bringing with them many skills, some of which are being celebrated at an exhibition, The Quiet Conquest, which continues at the Museum of London until October 31.

The current chairman is, remarkably, still a Toye and Bryan Toye's workforce practises the traditional skills of the Huguenots, embroidering in gold and silver wire, weaving and painting in enamel. Diversifying into regalia and insignia, enamel and woven, embroidered and screen printed badges, the company designed and made the limited-edition copper enamel box for Huguenot Heritage Year and will be demonstrating its skills at the exhibition.

The embroiderer will be working with gold and silver wire on a state trumpeter's banner at the museum on June 12, August 20 and September 26. There will also be a completed banner on permanent exhibition during the course of the exhibition.

The introduction of the rifle towards the end of the 19th-century brought a reversal in fortunes for Toye's, as the gold and silver decorations on officers' uniforms were a perfect target for enemy fire.

Glittering gold and silver gave way to camouflage khaki so Toye's moved into embroidered regalia, hand-painted banners and ornamental sashes for friendly societies and trade unions.

At the time of the coronation of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth in 1937, Toye's made banners, emblems, robes and insignia which they made again for the coronation of the present Queen. In 1953 they gained a Royal Warrant.

Today it has moved into the mass market too, making embroidered woven and screen-printed badges for the Girl Guides and the British Amateur Gymnastics Association, Salvation Army bands, cap ribbons for the Royal yacht Britannia and police forces is its bread and butter work.

THE CASE FOR CHANGE

SOCIAL SERVICES SECRETARY, Mr NORMAN FOWLER's Green Paper on Britain's creaking social security system does propose major and radical reforms. It would though be premature to say that his ideas elevate him to the status of a second Beveridge; as a shrewd politician, Mr FOWLER has backed away from some of the most fundamental options such as integration of the tax and benefit system. Nonetheless his proposals form a substantial and much needed restatement of the relationship between the individual and the State and a simplification of the social security system.

Mr FOWLER is sure to face considerable criticism from Opposition parties and the vested interests during the consultation period which ends in September. He hopes to introduce a White Paper before the end of the year and legislation passed in time for the new structure to be in place by April 1987. The Labour party has been running scare stories for some weeks that the reform is a device for concealing major cuts. In fact few figures have emerged from the Green Paper and Mr FOWLER has maintained — perhaps regrettably — that financial savings are not an aim of the review. Some Tory MPs have also started to run scared of the proposals; in recent years, the Tory party has been keen to call for radical reforms, but quite prepared to back down before the complaints of vested interests. Special pleading should be left to the lobbyists; MPs should look to the national interest.

The vested interests will be out in full force to try and block Mr FOWLER's plans to phase out the State Earnings Related Pension (Serps). This scheme was fundamentally flawed in that it is no part of the Government's role to provide an income. In addition Mr FOWLER points out that it provides an unacceptable burden on future generations. It does nothing for those who have retired before 1978 and has done nothing to encourage the spread of occupational pensions. The radical option of abolition is much more acceptable than tinkering with the scheme.

Major changes in the benefit system were long overdue. Mr FOWLER starts his introduction to the Green Paper by saying that "to be blunt the British social security system has lost its way." It is too complex, it no longer meets needs and its development over the past 40 years has been haphazard. The proposals envisage the abolition of family income supplement which will be replaced by a family income credit; it will be paid net, meaning that people will no longer be made poorer by earning more. The complex supplementary benefit system will be replaced by a system of income support, with special premiums for low paid families with children. Housing benefit is to be greatly simplified and all households will pay a minimum 20 per cent to rates.

It is to be regretted that Mr FOWLER has not shown more enthusiasm for a fully integrated tax and benefit system, though he has taken some steps in that direction. The tax and benefit year are to be aligned and the Government's Green Paper on personal taxation will examine further possibilities for links in the two systems. But Mr FOWLER continues to back the contributory principle even though it has lost general credibility. Within the parameters he has set himself, Mr FOWLER's proposals should simplify, modernise and direct resources to the genuinely needy more effectively than the present system. It is a plan that could be sold politically with a little help from his friends.

WHILE THE IRON IS HOT

IN THE COMMONS YESTERDAY, Mrs THATCHER did everything expected of her and everything she sensibly could to respond to the Brussels holocaust. What is more, she did it in her most characteristic and convincing style. Not for her deep and prolonged investigations into the causes of soccer violence or any other manifestations of human wickedness: one does not set up a study into the causes of arson before calling out the fire engine. Instead, she proposed prompt and practical measures — legislation on the Scottish model to prevent drunkenness at soccer matches, more powers for the police (as envisaged in Mr BRITTAN's public order proposals) to control potentially disorderly crowds, pressure on the football authorities to regulate rigorously the access of spectators to football grounds. She also promised assistance to the Belgian police in bringing the guilty to book. She welcomed the indefinite ban on the participation of English clubs in European contests.

All this amounts to a sharp shock to the football world, and not necessarily a particularly short one. To football hooligans and those who are tempted to be swept along with them, it could amount to what the psychiatrists call "a real experience". What was most encouraging, however, was the relative acquiescence which Mrs THATCHER's line secured in the Commons. Inevitably, Mr KINNOCK felt obliged to animadvert on the deeper causes and Mr HEFFER to make dark remarks about the responsibility of Right-wing organisations; but, on the whole, the Prime Minister carried the House with her.

As Saturday's events at Stonehenge showed, mob violence is not an isolated phenomenon. The present public mood gives the Government a unique opportunity to act firmly and sensibly about public order in general. It should not be missed; the memory of Brussels will soon fade, if it is not diligently kept alive.

GEORGE BROWN

ALL LORD GEORGE-BROWN'S frailties were visible, all too often publicly visible. His virtues were better hidden, but they were there and some were solid. It is vain to reflect on what might have happened to Labour and the rest of us had he won the leadership contest against HAROLD WILSON in 1963. His temperament was too erratic, his temper too unsure to build such dreams on.

There lurked in him certain of ERNIE BEVIN's characteristics, but he lacked all but one of Bevin's enduring qualities. They shared a clear perception of Communism, and a distaste for ambiguity towards it by members of the Labour party. However fuddled he got, GEORGE BROWN was never muddled about that. There may be some in his old party, perhaps even a few among his old enemies who now feel drawn to echo HORATIO's salute: "Now cracks a noble heart . . ."

The sick man of Europe who invaded an Arab blancmange

A lethal combination of contempt and fear clouded Eden's view of Nasser until it became as fatuous as it was far-reaching, argues

GORDON BROOK-SHEPHERD

IN THE spring and summer of 1953 and '54 I did two hot-weather (and hot-spot) stints in Cairo as a youthful foreign correspondent of this newspaper. They were fascinating months to live at the political centre of the Middle East and memories came back vividly when I watched last night's episode in the Channel 4 "End of Empire" series, dealing with the Suez affair.

Col. Nasser had gradually emerged as the unchallenged leader of the revolution which had toppled the Egyptian monarchy and, in these early days, he was both approachable and affable. Not least to me since he reasoned (quite wrongly) that any staff member of THE DAILY TELEGRAPH must have personal influence somewhere in Churchill's Conservative Government. I saw no reason to disabuse him and one result was an afternoon's cruise with him up and down the Nile.

As I went ashore he said: "You see, you are the sort of Englishman I can talk to. Tell me, why is it that I just cannot get through to your Foreign Office?"

Well, I could have told him but I didn't. It was already becoming clear that Nasser would never get through to the British Foreign Office as long as Sir Anthony Eden, the then Foreign Secretary (and from April, 1955, Prime Minister) controlled British policy.

Eden's feelings towards Gamul Abdel Nasser were a strange and lethal combination of contempt and fear. Eden was an old-fashioned romantic about Arabs (as about much else). For him the model was the Bedouin sheikh for whom the mere sight of a two-funnelled British warship (let alone a three-funnelled one) would always signal compliance.

Nasser, a product of the new mould of urban lower-class Arab, just didn't fit into this noble Arabian picture and the only time the two men ever met face to face (in the British embassy in Cairo in February, 1955), Eden made him feel it. He talked very much de haut en bas as the famous polished Tory diplomat lecturing the raw revolutionary novice.

A CERTAIN unease that the world might be falling into the hands of such rough and radical newcomers was doubtless present even then. But it turned into fear when, later that year, the tussle was on to persuade King Hussein of Jordan to join the pro-Western Baghdad Pact. Eden became convinced that Nasser's propaganda (plus Saudi money) was entirely responsible for blocking Jordan's accession. He was even convinced that Nasser had been behind the young king's decision, on April 1, 1956, to dismiss his British adviser, Glubb Pasha, on the spot, "suddenly, like a pilfering servant" (in Eden's own words). In fact, not a shred of evidence emerged, then or since, that Nasser even knew of Hussein's decision.

But from this moment — and we are now only six months away from the Anglo-French landings at Suez — Eden's obsession with Nasser took shape, blurring out all that calm logic and patience for which he had been so rightly famous for so many years as an international diplomatist.

For him, Nasser became, quite simply, a new Hitler, while Cairo's "Voice of the Arabs" radio service was Goebbels, arisen from the ruins of the Fuhrer bunker. Their alleged programme, which Eden somehow believed to be credible, was to bring the whole Arab world under the banner of Nasserite socialism.

This illusion was as fatuous as it was far-reaching. Nasser was not an evil man, let alone the incarnation of evil which Hitler represented. Even more important, his own nation, both in its economic structure and its human make-up, was a hopeless vehicle for any such project. Hitler's Germany was tungsten; Nasser's Egypt blancmange. Yet nothing would turn Eden aside from this passionate conviction that the 1950s were a re-run of the '30s.

He was already aching for a chance to step into the breach of history when, in July of 1956, Nasser seized the Suez canal some 12 years before its international treaty status expired. Eden saw it as an exact replica of Hitler's walk-in to the Rhineland 20 years before. The democracies had failed to stop the rot by force then; they must not fail now.

Hence his immediate order to the British Chiefs of Staff to draw up plans to re-take the canal through a military operation. Hence Eden's frustration when, throughout those tense but tedious midsummer weeks of 1956, military action seemed closed out, first by the pointless "Canal Users" Conference in London and then by an equally pointless referral of the dispute to the United Nations (where Britain was forced, for the first time, to use her veto). Hence his delight when, in September, the French produced their Columbus egg solution: Israel, already under intense pressure from Nasser's fedayeen guerrillas, should attack Egypt so that Britain and France, on the pretext of "separating the protagonists," could seize back the canal.

Many detailed inside accounts have since been revealed of these secret bipartite and tripartite talks in September 1956 between Israeli, French and British representatives to prepare for the joint operation. But the important revelations have all come from French and particularly Israeli sources. In his own memoirs, Eden glides over any question of collusion by talking merely of "canvassing the French" about ways in which "the [Arab-Israeli] situation might develop." He leaves the reader with the impression that it was only on Oct. 25, less than a week before the Anglo-French invasion took place, that such an operation was officially considered, and then only "in principle."

The time falls due, under the 30-year rule, to reveal the full truth about Britain's part in the Suez pre-planning when, at the end of next year, our own official documents on the crisis become available for release. Eden's actions, given his personal convictions in the matter, were honourable ones. The only whiff of dishonour is the suspicion about his own "suppressio verio" for posterity. There must be no similar process at work among the weeders at the Public Record Office. If only by silent consent (and probably by more) Britain played along with the entire conspiracy.

WE have seen how Eden's obsessions with Nasser affected his ability as a politician to deal with a political threat. Alas, he did just as disastrously when, in the autumn of 1956, he took off his homburg and put on the helmet in the attempt to topple Nasser by forte.

Not for him the Marx Brothers film, the brandy and the good night's rest which Churchill could enjoy during the worst moments of a far greater conflict. Eden worried and fussed and interfered so much that his poor generals were driven to distraction. He ended as a sleepless, nervous wreck who, had he been serving in the field, would have been relieved of duty as "unfit for command."

He even got the Americans wrong, despite his deep knowledge of them from the war-time years. Pathetically, he clung for months to one single phrase uttered by the U S Secretary of State, Foster Dulles (that Nasser must be made "to disgorge his prey") as a pledge that America would always back Britain in military action. It soon became obvious (and should have been from the start) that, once the chips were down, the Anglo-French invasion would prove altogether too "colonialist" for President Eisenhower, especially in election year.

There remains one final riddle: did Eden, as has been repeatedly alleged, really want Nasser assassinated? It would have been a tall order professionally in 1956, for those so-called "wet jobs" had been abandoned by our intelligence services soon after the end of the war. But, given the nature of the obsession described above, is it too much to believe that he could come out with the exasperated equivalent of "Who will rid me of this turbulent priest?" As Thomas à Becket found out, King Henry wasn't exactly joking on that occasion. However, if they were asked, Eden's knights would have said "No."

LONDON DAY BY DAY

Adding absence to injury

DESPITE THEIR much vaunted efforts to rebuild bridges with the Italians after the Brussels football disaster, Government Ministers were noticeable by their absence at yesterday's reception at the Italian Ambassador's Grosvenor Square residence.

Although Neil Kinnock, Peter Shore and Eric Heffer turned up from the Labour front bench to pay their condolences, Sir Michael Havers, the Attorney General, was the only leading Conservative at the somewhat sombre gathering to mark Italy's national day.

Many guests felt, particularly after Saturday's diplomatic gaffe when no British Government wreath was laid on the coffins of the Juventus fans in the Brussels hanger, that at the very least an appearance by Neil Macfarlane, the Sports Minister, would have been appreciated.

Signor Andrea Cagiati, the outgoing Italian Ambassador, was obviously saddened by the absence of leading Conservatives. He told me diplomatically: "They must all be somewhere else."

Northern lights

BRADFORD'S most famous son, David Hockney, is among many leading British artists who have offered works for sale at an auction tonight at the city's Midland Hotel in aid of families bereft by the tragic fire at the football ground.

Connoisseurs from London's art world will be in attendance at the sale which will include pictures by Norman Stevens, Robert Oxterby and Sir Hugh Casson. Roger de Grey, president of the Royal Academy, has also contributed pieces from the summer exhibition.

Organised by local artist, Peter Rogers and his gallery owning friend David Wright with the help of the Duchess of Devonshire and Lord Harewood, the auction is potentially the most important in the North for many years. Christie's and Sotheby's are taking it seriously enough to send their representatives to what is expected to be a lucrative sale for a charitable cause.

Memory lapse

ALTHOUGH the Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang is receiving the full red-carpet treatment on his visit to Britain, the Foreign Office appears anxious to brush aside memories of his last official visit to this country just six years ago.

Then a simple chairman of a lowly Provincial Revolutionary Committee, Zhao was virtually ignored by the Foreign Office mandarins and placed in the hands of the most junior Minister at the Ministry of Agriculture, Jerry Wiggin.

Last night Wiggin, who proved a splendid host, recalled that a State visit was underway on the day he was due to take Zhao for lunch at the Goring Hotel. Seeing the streets were all blocked he arranged for Zhao to be whisked the wrong way along the royal route from Whitehall.

Later he sought the Chinese Ambassador's permission to take Zhao out on to the street where cheering crowds watched the Queen go past.

Now that Zhao is one of the top men in China the Foreign Office appears anxious to overlook the earlier visit and Wiggin has not even been invited to meet his former guest.

Separate rooms

THE DIVISIONS inside the Alliance continue to widen. On Sunday night a joint Press conference was announced by the S D P and Liberals at the National Liberal Club to announce the chairmanship of the Alliance group on the Association of County Councils.

John Cartwright, the S D P's local government spokesman, found that he had to make the statement on his own because his Liberal opposite number, Simon Hughes was nowhere to be found.

After 20 minutes it was discovered that Hughes was in a different room in the same building briefing on the Liberal point of view. Relations between the two sides are now further strained.

Names of new drinks become ever more exotic—perhaps in line with the fad among young people for cocktail-style concoctions. I am told that three new bottles will be appearing on pub shelves this month named Topaz, Bezique and Konliki.

What's in a name?

THERE WAS a hurried piece of retitling in Aberdeen recently when a concert party booked to mark the 40th anniversary of VE-Day turned out to have the name "There'll always be an England."

Scottish pride was salvaged when the troupe changed their name and the show went on with the title "We'll Meet Again."

Pork scratchings

WHEN THE Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Runcie, visits St Dunstan's and All Saints church in Stepney tomorrow he will be greeted by a litter of pigs in the churchyard.

The pigs were deemed an appropriate idea since Runcie is an enthusiastic pig breeder. Canon Norry McCurry, the Rector of Stepney, explained yesterday that they would come from an urban farm opposite the church. Among the distinguished guests attending the ceremony—which marks the church's 1000th anniversary and its success with a £215,000 appeal—will be the Iman of Whitechapel, the East End's Moslem leader.

Would he be going through the churchyard, I enquired?

"I think he will be using a side entrance," Canon McCurry replied discreetly.

"We have ways of making you talk . . ."

Flag of convenience

PRINCE ANDREW has arranged for one of the standards that fly over Buckingham Palace to be sent to the English Church in Naples to celebrate the church's close royal links.

The Prince visited the church just before Christmas and was told that the old standard—somewhat the worse for wear—had been presented by Edward VII when he visited in 1905 and taken from the Royal Yacht Victoria and Albert.

Andrew arranged a replacement. But sadly, according to the Bishop of Gibraltar's Diocesan letter, the Palace was forced to apologise that the replacement flag which they sent immediately came from Buckingham Palace itself rather than the Britannia.

One man's meat . . .

A READER recently spotted a sign in the window of a Lymington baker which said: "Have you tried our home-made pies? You'll never get better."

PETERBOROUGH

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

BREAK-UP OF COUNCIL MEETING

SIR — You rightly state in your leader (May 24) that the impending surrender of the few remaining rebel councils, after Hackney had caved in, will constitute a "resounding victory" for the policies and tactics of the Secretary of State, Mr Patrick Jenkin. But there is more to it than that.

As one who has sat through, and actively participated in, the tedious rate-making process in Hackney which stretched over six long meetings with bitter recriminations by all against all, I feel it is important to highlight what the present battle is about and what it is not about—and what we have to learn from it.

The battle is not about rate-capping, loss of jobs or loss of services, as the loony Left so vociferously asserts. The battle is about no less than democracy versus Marxist-inspired anarchy. The rates issue has conveniently been chosen as the cause célèbre around which the battle lines were drawn. How could one otherwise explain the lockout from the town hall of elected members by militant trade unionists, aided and abetted by strong-arm political allies from all over London, who neither work nor live in the borough?

How could one otherwise explain the break-up of a subsequent council meeting by the same people whose threatening behaviour made any coherent debate impossible? What was the motive of the Left-wing councillor who, in the midst of the mêlée, shouted out: "Comrades, I want you to know that the town hall is surrounded by large contingents of the police" — which was not true?

And what was the intent of like-minded councillors who, in debate, continuously foreshadowed street riots and violence "if councillors ignore the will of the people"? or of the councillor who referred to "Scargill, our leader"?

During one of the debates in council chamber, a trade union leader was allowed to make a public statement to highlight the opposition of the workforce against the Government's policy which, he said, will involve "massive loss of jobs and services."

I then publicly challenged him, having seen rate proposals before the council, and having agitated for a whole year against the Rates Act, to tell the council precisely how many jobs and services he thought will be lost if a rate is set within the limits laid down by the Secretary of State. The man blushed and faltered and had to admit that he could not answer. His own propaganda had clearly let him down and he could no longer differentiate between fact and fiction.

What lesson do we have to learn from all this?

Having lived through every minute of this agonising episode I am convinced that once the dust has settled over the rates issue, the militants will find another issue and then another. They are hell-bent to destroy the democratic process of government and impose their autocratic will on the people of this country.

If and when this happens, it will not be the fault of the militant agitators, but of the silent majority of British people who — like the Germans in the early 'thirties—allowed it to happen.

I firmly believe that, as massive sections of the Labour and trade union movements are overtly and covertly dominated by these anti-democratic elements, and as the founding fathers of the Social Democratic party have their roots in the Labour movement and did nothing to stop the rot when they had a chance to do so, the only safeguard to democracy lies in defeating the militant agitators through the ballot box, be it in local, national or by-elections, and supporting Conservative candidates, notwithstanding temporary setbacks which the party may suffer from time to time.

Sports reporting and Brussels disaster

From Sir HUGH GREENE

SIR—You describe the B B C's decision to proceed with the transmission on television of the European cup final in Brussels after the disastrous events which preceded it as a "chilling performance." Was it a "chilling performance" for you to report the match in your sports columns?

The B B C was doing it in its own way: the presentation of news as it happens in vision. You in yours, in print.

That you should go on to suggest that the B B C made its decision for financial reasons because "it had bought the match for the screen" is, from my knowledge of the way in which such decisions are made, utterly ridiculous.

It makes me just a little bit ashamed of the newspaper for which I reported many "chilling" occasions in the 1930s.

Hooligans with leaders

SIR—I would be very interested to hear Mrs Thatcher's definition of a soccer hooligan. In my book a hooligan is a hooligan! If that is the case, why are we out to punish football clubs?

Why not publicans who allow hooligans to fight in their pubs? Why not British Rail, who allow hooligans to wreck their trains? And why not town councils who allow hooligans to terrorise citizens in their streets?

It's time we realised that this is our joint problem, and it's time we got our priorities right, and it's time that we had some positive leadership . . . after all, it's clear to anyone who wants to see, that the one thing the hooligans have got themselves is leadership.

Years of inactivity

SIR—Except for the scale of the horror at the Heysel Stadium is anyone really surprised at what happened?

The writing has been on the wall for years thanks to the supine inactivity of politicians, successive Sports Ministers and club chairmen.

Blackout of football

SIR—The B B C and Independent Television should boycott any televising of football matches until the fans show signs that they can behave themselves.

We have vowed never to watch a football match again until this time arrives.

Gross injustice

SIR—Referring to the letter from Mr Tim Yeo, MP, and others (May 27), advocating the lifting of controls on new tenancy agreements, good luck to them!

But why do they say that existing tenancies would not be affected? Why not?

Landlords who have suffered gross injustice for years should be the first to receive consideration. Is there any other circumstance where a private individual who has committed no offence is forbidden by law to obtain possession of his own legally acquired assets?

Is there any other instance where one private individual is compelled by law to subsidise another private individual without any regard for the respective financial positions?

I have long advocated that this matter should be taken to the European Court of Human Rights

Cowardice names

SIR—Your report: "Clear names of 500 shot for cowardice, urges Legion." (May 28), requires closer examination.

According to your reporter, a Mr Joe Hanley told the Royal British Legion Conference that "more than 500 men were shot after being found guilty of cowardice by court martial" in the 1914-18 war. He added that "in war cemeteries they were buried apart from their comrades. It is time that the stigma of cowardice is lifted from them."

Despite sensible reservations on the part of a member of the Legion's national council, it appears that the conference supported Mr Hanley's proposal that these men should be officially pardoned.

It would be interesting to know where he gets his figures. The official publication: "Statistics of the Military Effort of the British Emoire During the Great War" (H M S O 1922), based on returns of the Judge Advocate General's department, informs us that between Aug. 4 1914 and March 31 1920 there were 551 offences listed as "Cowardice" (p. 667). Between the same dates, 18 death sentences for cowardice were actually carried out (p. 649). This has to be read in relation to the total of 346 death sentences (for all offences) carried out during that period, out of 3,080 passed (11·23 per cent).

As regards being "buried apart," I have never, in over 30 years of frequent visits to 1914-18 cemeteries, discovered any kind of segregation, either by rank, or by Service, or by (Empire) country of origin. Nor have I ever seen any reference to cause of death on any headstone or in any register.

The Ministry of Defence is reported as saying that "such a request from the Legion would be given every consideration." This should, I suggest, include getting the facts right.

The GP's earnings

SIR—As a DAILY TELEGRAPH reader of many years it was with some concern that I read Mr Peter Paliot's misleading, sensational article entitled "The £40,000-a-year G P" (May 29).

He rightly states that the gross remuneration of a general practioner in Britain is £45,000 per annum. However, he omits to stress that this is a gross figure representing income before paying employed staff and accounting for all practice running costs.

The average net income (i.e. income before tax, superannuation, national insurance, etc) of a general practitioner is approximately £23,000 per annum.

There may, indeed, be one or two G Ps earning a net £40,000 per year although I have never met any such doctors.

One of the great problems within general practice is the great variation in quality of care throughout the country. The Royal College of General Practitioners has, and is, actively working towards uniformly high quality of primary medical care.

Sadly, the method of payment in general practice supports a positive income bias towards general practitioners with maximum patient lists, inadequate premises and employing insufficient supporting staff. In contrast, the practitioner working from modern premises, employing optimum staff numbers, practising preventative medicine, running extra clinics and generally providing high standards of primary medical care, does so to his own financial disadvantage.

One hopes that any change in a system of remuneration for general practitioners will rectify this situation and provide financial incentives for preventive medicine and high standards of medical care. In your recent article, David Taylor, the chairman of the Family Practitioner Committee in South London, is quoted as saying that we should be looking at a straight capitation fee basis for general practice.

Surely this would do nothing other than encourage doctors to have large list sizes to the detriment of standards?

Turning on Sri Lanka

SIR—May I offer my congratulations on Mr Richard West's article "Why Britain should feel no shame in turning away the Tamils"?

At last, the eyes of the British public are being opened at the utterly vicious disinformation campaign carried out by the well-organised international Tamil movement against Sri Lanka. Many of these Tamils, it is sad to say, received their entire education (including higher education at university level) in Sri Lanka, fully paid for by the "vicious Sinhalese Governments" and are now spitting at their country of birth.

It is now clearly established that the damage done during the 1983 riots was carried out by well-organised political thugs and the majority Sinhalese had no part in it.

I think a few kind words for the majority Sinhalese (who ran most of the refugee camps during the riots) are well deserved for putting up with the Tamils for so long: they are hell bent on dividing Sri Lanka purely on a racial basis.

Obituary: LORD GEORGE-BROWN

Explosive and unpredictable but nation loved him for it

By AUGUSTUS TILLEY

LORD GEORGE BROWN, who has died aged 70, rose to become Minister of Economic Affairs and then Foreign Secretary, but was ever explosive and unpredictable.

He resigned in a fit of pique in March 1968 and never again held ministerial office, but as deputy leader of the Labour party he continued the indiscretions for which he seemed to have an endless capacity.

For a man with all the gifts, support and attributes of a Prime Minister, his social gaffes were indeed tragic.

A lesser man would soon have been destroyed by the sniggers about his drinking habits, which made him a national joke and a frequent embarrassment to his party.

It did not affect his popularity, however, and indeed may well have increased it. He was the nation's naughty boy, and the nation loved him for it.

Born in Southwark, the son of a lorry driver, he succeeded Aneurin Bevan as deputy leader of the Labour party to Hugh Gaitskell in 1960; but on

Editorial Comment—Facing Page

Gaitskell's death in 1963 the party played safe, and he lost the leadership election to Harold Wilson, who became Prime Minister 18 months later.

In 1970 he lost his seat at Belper, which he had held for 25 years, and was made a life peer. In 1976 he left the Labour party, sitting on the cross-benches until in 1981 he joined the newly formed Social Democratic Alliance.

The memory of his bluster, his 45-year love-hate relationship with Labopr and his ultimate divorce from it will almost certainly outlive that of his ministerial achievements.

When he took his peerage he changed his name to George-Brown by deed poll so that he could be known by his own name when he took his seat in the Lords.

When he left school at 14 he had already inherited his father's fervent Socialist principles. He went to work first as a junior City clerk, then as a shop assistant; but evening classes prepared him for the eight years he was to serve as an official of the Transport and General Workers' Union.

His rise was the traditional progress of the orthodox Labour politician, though there were some who wondered at his success. He took part in Socialist League of Youth activities and was an unpaid official of constituency Labour parties, becoming engaged in local and sometimes turbulent politics.

In 1937 he married the daughter of Sol Levene, a well known East End figure, whom he had met at League of Youth meetings. After the 1939-45 war he won Belper in the 1945 landslide Labour victory.

Not afraid to cross swords

He was soon discovered by Clement Attlee, the Labour Prime Minister, as a middle-of-the-road but up-and-coming young man. He was given successively the posts of Parliamentary Private Secretary to the Minister of Labour 1945-47, Parliamentary Private Secretary to the Chancellor 1947, Joint Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Agriculture 1947-51, before becoming Minister of Works from April until October 1951.

A tubby figure with heavy eyebrows, he had the habit of addressing all and sundry as "brother", an appellation common in his trade union not appreciated by everyone.

Enemies accused him of bombast, but he was not afraid to cross swords with Aneurin Bevan, a formidable adversary who be devastating in invective. George Brown never wasted much love on the Bevanites.

Nor did he seek to ingratiate himself with Frank Cousins, his robust-tempered union chief. Undeterred by the fact that the union supplemented his Parliamentary election expenses, he clashed with Cousins on such issues as nuclear defence, the Common Market and State ownership.

He won widespread admiration in 1956 by the way he criticised Khrushchev at a dinner given by the Labour party executive at the House of Commons for Khrushchev and Bulganin.

This was the first visit to London by any Soviet leaders since the 1917 Revolution, and consequently the first time they had endured the voice of dissent. Offended by Krushchev's non-fraternal arrogance, George Brown made several critical interjections while the Russian chief was speaking.

At one point, when Krushchev was justifying the 1939 Molotov-Ribbentrop pact which preceded the attack on Poland by only a few days, George Brown exclaimed: "May God forgive you."

The angered Krushchev was reported as saying: "If these people are Socialists, give me the Conservatives."

Surely speaking for England

George Brown may have seriously embarrassed his party colleagues, and scandalised the diplomats, but he had shown his mettle and was surely speaking for England. From then on he was a major force in the Labour party.

He was the central figure in another incident which even more gravely embarrassed his colleagues. As deputy leader in November 1963 he was called from a Labour party dinner at short notice to pay a television tribute to President Kennedy only an hour or so after his assassination.

His extraordinary behaviour in front of the cameras and the content of his remarks caused an uproar, mainly confined to his own party. His condition was euphemistically described as "overwrought."

After another television appearance in April 1965 there were many telephone calls from viewers about his state of health. Later it was announced that he had been advised to take "a break of 10 days or so from work."

His biggest gaffe of all occurred in January 1970, when he was out of office but still Labour's deputy leader. He was attending a farewell dinner party at the end of a Middle East tour, given for him by Mr Abba Eban, the Israeli Foreign Minister, when suddenly there was a fierce argument between George Brown and his hosts.

Prices and Incomes Policy

It was reported at the time that he called Mrs Golda Meir a Russian Jewish immigrant, told Gen. Herzog, former Chief of Intelligence, to "wipe that silly grin off your face," and shouted at Mr John Barnes, the British Ambassador, who tried to restrain him: "You shut up. You have to support everything I say, otherwise . . ." before being led away by his wife.

As the Minister of Economic Affairs he was responsible for the now forgotten National Plan, as well as being the architect of Labour's Prices and Incomes Policy. Both sides of industry joined his national board, and Mr Aubrey Jones, a former Conservative Minister, was made chairman.

His National Plan proved unreal and unattainable. He was given the thankless task of freezing wages and prices. A tough credit squeeze was imposed.

In July 1966 he offered his resignation, for his expanionist views were opposed to Harold Wilson's deflationary measures, but he soon withdrew it. In a Cabinet reshuffle three weeks later he became Foreign Secretary.

An American London correspondent described him in 1967 as "an excitable and sometimes impossible man, whose social conduct is eccentric and who is given to insulting friends and enemies alike".

He continued: "Brown has a problem that might better be mentioned openly than snickered over, as it usually is in Britain. One day he can swallow half a dozen drinks in a few minutes before noon and show no ill effects. On other occasions it takes almost nothing to trigger the emotions pent up inside him."

The article acknowledged his abilities as a statesman, but his performance as Foreign Minister aroused mixed feelings. Some felt that, as a committed European, he was Britain's best Foreign Minister since the war. Others said he was an unqualified disaster.

Unhelpful to ambassadors

After the publication in 1970 of his memoirs, "In My Way," Sir Evelyn Shuckburgh, who had been Ambassador in Rome when George Brown was Foreign Secretary, accused him of denigrating and ridiculing the Diplomatic Service and of being unhelpful to ambassadors, and indulging in escapades behind their backs.

He said he had claimed credit for ideas on running the Foreign Office which were common practice before he had arrived.

When he resigned as Foreign Secretary the Labour Government's fortunes were at a low ebb. There was a world monetary crisis and the United States had asked Britain for help in stemming the "gold rush".

Harold Wilson decided on extraordinar emergency measures, and George Brown alleged he had not been consulted before the steps were taken.

In his letter of resignation he complained of "the way the Government is run and the manner in which we reach our decisions."

Despite his failings, colleagues regarded him as the best brain in the Cabinet. His ability to penetrate to the point of complicated issues was matched by great intellectual energy and a gift for expressing his thoughts in orderly yet vivid style.

If he had enjoyed a longer formal education he would have been Harold Wilson's equal in everything but cool, calculating judgment.

Closed shop legislation

An extrovert rashness was his major flaw. This was vented in impulsive outbursts and sulks, for which as like as not he would apologise most handsomely next day but which inevitably left the impression of instability. Yet there was no one more steadfast in his beliefs nor more courageous in putting them forward.

With all his faults he was honest, true and big-hearted. Though he often infuriated Conservative opponents they held him in high regard as the most genuine of Labour's leading figures.

In 1976, disillusioned by closed shop industrial legislation, which he feared threatened the freedom of the individual, he left the Labour party.

The foundation of the SDP saw his re-emergence as a barnstorming campaigner, but he was soon collecting a three-year driving ban after a drink-drive charge.

"I am what I am," he once said, "and you must take me as you find me.

"But if I were advising God on how to make me a second time, there are parts of my temperament I would suggest He left out."

DE LOREAN PLANS NEW CAR

By IAN BRODIE in Los Angeles

MR JOHN DE LOREAN confirmed yesterday that he plans to build a new faster sports car using spare parts acquired after his company went bankrut with the loss of £77 million of British taxpayers' money.

He accused the British Government of trying to scupper the idea, which lawyers predicted could run into sever legal problems over trademark rights.

A Wall Street car industry analyst took a dim view of the prospect for investors in a new De Lorean model and predicted little support.

"I think it would be more fun just to go out and throw your money off the Brookyn Bridge, said Mr David Healy, of Drexel Burnham Lambert in New York.

Mr De Lorean, 60, scoffed at the assessment. "They said the same thing about thing about Lee Iacocca and Chrysler," he said.

Plant in Ohio

He told the Los Angeles Herald that he had been working on the project for about six months. Assembly would be in Columbus, Ohio, at a plant owned by Kapac, a spare-parts distribution company which acquired most of the De Lorean inventory.

A court-appointed trustee for De Lorean creditors owns the design, manufacturing, distribution and trademark rights for the car, said Mr Sheldon Toll, a Detroit lawyer representing the trustee, Mr David Allard. He is also a lawyer in Detroit.

Mr De Lorean remains under investigation by a Federal Grand Jury in Detroit which has been trying to trace $15,900,000 that disappeared from the De Lorean company in 1978. Mr De Lorean denies any misappropriation or other wrongdoing.

He is mostly in the news these days for his work as a "born-again" Christian, which has included painting houses provided for the homeless by a church group.

Last week, in a San Francisco Press conference to promote his forthcoming autobiography, he confessed that he had essentially destroyed his life, company and family by being such an "egomaniacal moron."

'SOAP OPERAS' DOMINATE TV TOP TEN

By Our Television Staff

Soap operas accounted for seven of the eight ITV programmes in the national "top ten," and helped ITV to a 56 per cent. share of total viewing for the week ended May 26.

Included were both episodes of "Coronation Street," easily the most popular programme, with 16,300,000 viewers, two episodes of "Emmerdale Farm" and three editions of "Crossroads."

BBC's inner-city saga, "Eastenders," attracted almost 12 million viewers, more than "Dallas," but failed to make the chart.

The "top ten" were: 1, "Coronation Street" Wednesday (Granada); 2, "Coronation Street" Monday; 3, "Three Up, Two Down" (BBC-1); 4, "Emmerdale Farm" Tuesday (Yorkshire); 5, "Crossroads" Tuesday (Central); 6, "Crossroads" Wednesday; 7, "Crossroads" Thursday; 8, "Emmerdale Farm" Thursday; 9, "Busman's Holiday" (Granada); 10, "News and Sports" Saturday (BBC-1).

ARCHBISHOP ATTACKS EMBRYO BILL

By Our Churches Correspondent

The Archbishop of York, Dr John Habgood, supports Lady Warnock in opposing Mr Enoch Powell's bill in the House of Commons to make laboratory use of human embryos illegal.

He writes, in a letter to the TIMES: "There is no way of deciding on biological evidence alone whether a newly fertilised human ovum is or is not a human person. Nor are there any valid grounds on which Christians can claim that theology resolves the question."

Acknowledgment of this, he says, does not mean abandoning an attempt to legislate. Dr Habgood backs the Warnock Report recommendation that research under licence should be allowed on embryos up to 14 days old.

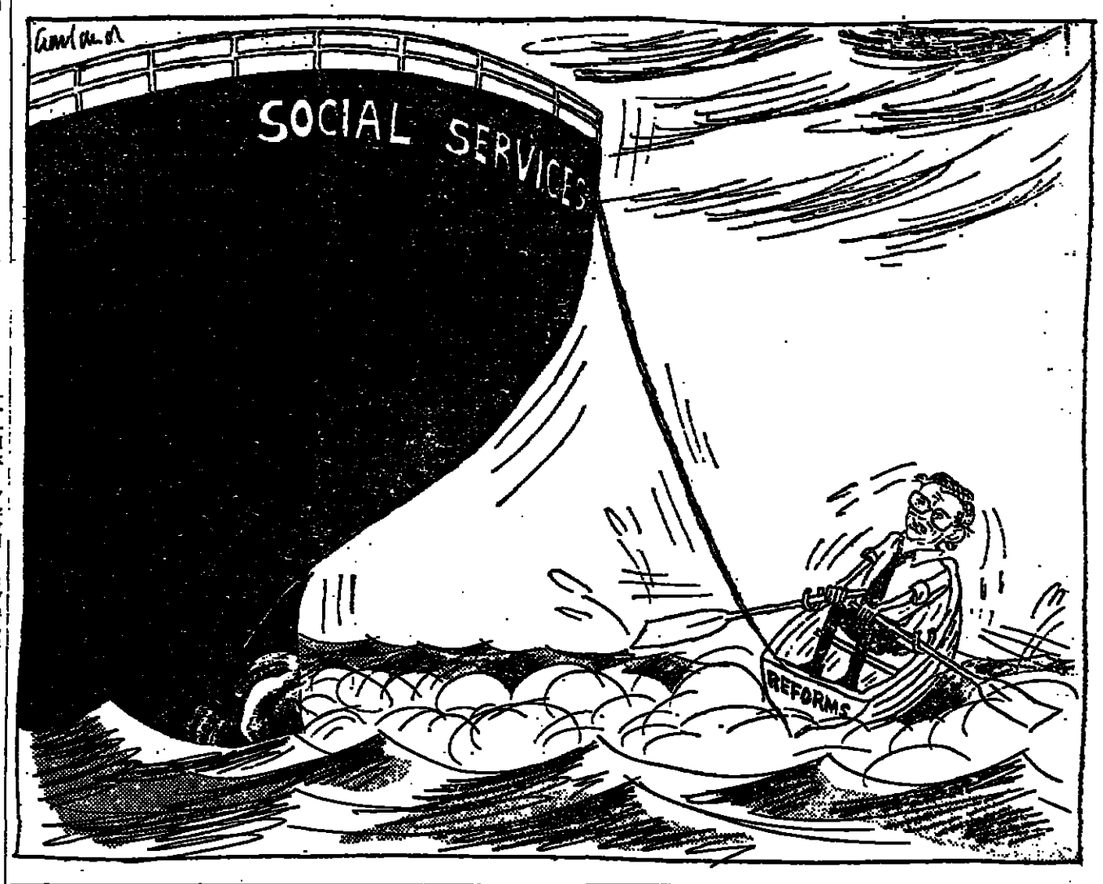
3 ARRESTED OVER FORGED BANKNOTES

By Our Crime Correspondent

Detectives hunting the ring-leaders of a counterfeiting gang have arrested a Briton, a German and a Frenchman. Officers from London, Paris and America joined forces for a swoop on a Calais hotel.

In a six-month investigation code-named Operation Businessman, detectives have trailed several London businessmen across Europe.

The officers seized £890,000 of near-perfect $100 bills. It is believed a gang was threatening to swamp Europe's tourism and banking industries with the fake money.



JASMINE HELP 'NOT ENOUGH'

A HEALTH visitor who dealt with the case of Jasmine Beckford, who died at the age of four after being battered by her stepfather and neglected by her mother, told an inquiry yesterday that she had a caseload of 385 families living in a socially deprived area.

She visited up to 15 families a day as well as coping with paperwork. Overcrowded housing was a big problem and communications were often hampered by language

Miss Yeng Lai Leong told the inquiry at Brent that the system of training and support for health visitors involved in cases of child abuse is inadequate.

Miss Leong, who saw Jasmine in the y ear after she was returned from foster care to her parents, said she was given little back up support on the case. She added: "To me it is not sufficient what we learn in college."

It had been left largely to her to decide on what follow-up action to take. Since the case, the back-up support from senior nursing staff had improved.

The hearing was adjourned until today.

10-year dog show ban on breeder who swore

By BRIAN SILK

THERE were blushes all around the dog show in Bournemouth when a Pekingese called Modesty Permits was paraded before the judges. Breeders were shocked to hear one of their number, Mrs BARBARA LASHMAR, hurl a string of four-letter words at the dog and its owner, Miss Adele Summers.

A Kennel Club hearing was told yesterday that Miss Summers fled from the ring in tears after Mrs Lashmar called her "a crook" and "a big head" and described the dog as "a cripple."

The club's general committee upheld four complaints against Mrs. Lashmar, 63, of Woodbatch Road, Redhill, Surrey, who was accused of bringing discredit on the canine world.

She was banned for 10 years from judging, exhibiting or attending dog shows.

The hearing was told that Mrs. Lashmar shouted and swore at Miss Summers and other breeders before one of the judges pulled her away from the ring during a Pekingese show run by Bournemouth Canine Association in August last year.

Miss SUMMERS, of Berrylands Farm, Stanford, Pirbright, Surrey, said that Mrs. Lashmar, who was sitting near the judges, began swearing at her as she walked her dog around the ring.

Miss Summers's partner Miss Vandella Williams, of the same address, said that she went up to Mrs Lashmar and asked her to stop using foul language. But this drew further abuse

Other breeders present at the show described Mrs Lashmar's behaviour.

Mrs Lashmar did not attend the hearing or reply to a letter from the club.

Her daughter, Carol, 32, who is also a show judge, said: "My mother could not attend the hearing because she is in hospital with terminal cancer."

She said that the ban was part of a "smear campaign by a mafia of dog owners."

A spokesman for the Kennel Club said later: "Mrs Lashmar has refused to answer our letters and no one has informed us that she is in hospital.

"Two registered letters were returned to us and we have tried to contact her through her solicitor.

WARSHIP TRIP FOR PRINCESS

By JENNY SHIELDS

THE Princess of Wales spent three hours at sea with the Royal Navy aboard the frigate Beaver, 3,500 tons, off Portland, Dorset, yesterday.

She had been due to launch the latest type 22 frigate, Cornwall, at Yarrow Shipbuilders in Glasgow, but that was postponed due to industrial trouble.

Instead she travelled to Dorset by helicopter and boarded the Beaver to watch a typical day's operations.

Yesterday the Princess also forged her first formal links with the British Army by agreeing to become Colonel-in-Chief of the Royal Hampshire Regt.

The Princess has also been appointed Honorary Air Commodore of RAF Wittering, Cambs., where many of the Harriers used in the Falklands are based.

THE two principal investment sections of London stock markets yesterday started the trading account in fine fettle, with operators pinning their hopes on a reduction in domestic base lending rates soon.

Investors took the view that the recent strong performance by sterling is likely to trigger off a cut in interest rates if today's money supply statistics for banking May prove to be satisfactory.

Government securities led the way, and demand was such that the Government broker sold out of two of last week's taplets, £200 million of the Exchequer 11 p.c., 1990 and £200 million of the Treasury 11¾ p.c., 2003-07. Short-dated gilts ended the session with gains extending to £⅝, while improvements in the longer-end were usually around a full point.

The market in blue chips was overshadowed by the activity in Government securities, but selective buying kept the tone firm. Sentiment was assisted by the latest Confederation of British Industry survey which reported record order books in May.

Of the sectors, the scent of cheaper money encouraged fresh support for the likes of stores, building and other consumer-related issues.

Plotting the course of leading equities, the "30" index opened 1·7 higher and made fresh progress at each subsequent calculation to close 8·2 better at 1010·7; the wider-based "100" index was finally 11·6 up at 1324·6, after 1325.

Among the leaders, Hanson Trust powered ahead to 240p prior to closing 8 firmer at 238p ahead of the interim results due today. Hopes of a bid from across the Atlantic saw Beechams touch 390p before light profit-taking left the final quote 3 dearer at 386p, but ICI were out of favour and retreated 9 to 767p. Thorn-EMI were sold down to 459p in response to adverse Press comment but buyers appeared at the lower levels and the shares recovered to close 15 higher at 479p.

Solid investment support was forthcoming for the clearing banks and closing gains extended to 19p. Barclays were well to the fore, being this much higher at 394p, while Lloyds, at 582p, and Midland, at 357p, picked up 12 and 8p respectively. National Westminster added a more modest 7p to 669p.

Mr Fowler's social services package was well anticipated by the life insurance sector, though the best gains were not always held. Legal & General were in the van and climbed to 710p before closing 17 better at 703p, Equity & Law picked up 14 to 271p, after 276p, while Prudential were supported to 690p prior to settling 18 to the good at 683p.

The trend in the brewery sector was uncertain but Distillers stood out and forged ahead 17 to 295p in response to mounting bid speculation.

Speculative activity was also rife in the building sector. French Kier were sought and rose 6 to 160p on hopes of a takeover from Trafalgar House, while suggestions that a consortium bid could be in the offing enlivened interest in Meyer, 7 firmer at 147p. Solid investment support provided the spur to C H Beazer, finally 18 higher at 392p, while Newarthill were wanted and added 10 to 670p.

The stores section was alive with bid talk, much of which stemmed from the weekend financial columns. In the wake of the House of Fraser stake, Debenhams sprang to life and put on 11 to 397p as hopes rose of a higher bid from Burton Group, 9½ better at 481p ex dividend. Harris Queensway were better at 254p, up 6, while in mail orders, Empire advanced 12 to 128p, and Freemans 8 to 244p following favourable comment.

A brokers' circular was responsible for strength in Dixons, finally 22 ahead at 717p, and expansion prospects helped Our Price, 25 to the good at 540p. A G Stanley were firmer at 71p, an improvement of 6p, after weekend comment, while a similar reason saw Etam rise 11 to 206p, and Liberty 75 to 625p; the last-named in a thin and sensitive market.

Hopes that Wold, a producer of frozen green vegetables, would establish a 25p premium in first-time dealings proved wide of the mark. The shares opened at 115p and after some lively two-way dealing settled at 106p, compared with the offer price of 95p.

Body Shop surged 93 to 838p in an extremely thin market on Press suggestions that the half-yearly results due June 12 could show profits approaching the £1 million mark. De La Rue sprang to life and put on 25 to 875p, after 880p, as buyers anticipated the results due today, while a revival of speculative support was responsible for strength in U K O International, 8 better at 139p.

United States growth prospects underpinned the market in Pentland Industries whose shares ended 20 ahead at £10, after touching £10⅛. A & P Appledore were wanted and advanced 16 to 298p as buyers warmed to the Falmouth development prospects, and United Wire, recently in receipt of a bid approach, were again active and rose 12 more to 210p.

Buying ahead of tomorrow's preliminary results lifted Reed International 26 to 628p, after 630p, while Bunzl perked up and advanced 21 to 471p in response to comment on the Brammer bid situation.

On the company news front, Carlton Communications were supported to 820p prior to closing 10 higher at 800p in reply to the more than doubled interim results, while Press comment was good for a gain of 20 to 340p in Microgen. Vague suggestions that Lowe Howard-Spink Campbell-Ewald has secured the Lloyds Bank account saw the former climb 13 to 278p, after 281p, but on the other hand, Geers Gross came on offer and plunged 25 to 83p on further consideration of the recent profits warning.

Common Bros featured an otherwise quiet shipping sector, sliding 10 to 48p in reflection of the industry's problems.

On a brighter note, F K I highlighted secondary electrical issues and added 5 to 49p following the annual results, while favourable comment fuelled Oceanics, 10 firmer at 80p. Publicity given to the recent board changes propelled Crystalate, 5 firmer at 155p.

Over on the food pitches, a Press suggestion that Ward White's chairman Philip Birch is casting a predatory eye over Maynards encouraged support for the latter which improved 14½ to 310p in their ex-dividend form.

Tailpiece

THE quality of management is all the more important in times of trading difficulties and a board of directors which faces up to its problems by undertaking a major rationalisation programme is doing its job. Such a situation has happened in A P V Holdings, the processing and heat transfer equipmet manufacturers.

After taking drastic action in disposals, closures and general tightening of controls, the company's results, announced in April, reflected the write-off of everything except the kitchen sink, hence pre-tax profits of only £8·61 million, against £18·3 million. However, the benefits of the group's tough action should start to come through in the current year and at the recent annual meeting the chairman, Sir Ronald McIntosh, was able to report a useful improvement in results for the first four months of 1985. At 296p, the shares seem to have further medium-term recovery potential.

Tokyo takes a tumble

SHARE prices took a sharp tumble on the Tokyo stock market yesterday as investors decided to cash in after the market's recent show of strength.

With an estimated 530m shares changing hands in trading dominated by profit-taking the Nikkei-Dow Jones average of 225 selected issues closed 216·06 points down at 12,473·41.

Losses were spread across the board, with export and bio-technology related issues, recent favourites, setting the pace.

Anglo pays more

FKI nears £3·5m

FKI ELECTRICALS has lifted its full year profits to March 31 from £2·26m before tax to £3·45m on turnover up from £10·7m to £18·5m.

The two largest recent acquisitions, English Numbering Machines and Burndept Electronics both made large contributions and the group reveals that Burndept has recently secured a £9m three-year contract with the Home Office.

The divident total is to be increased by 18 p.c. to 0·5p net with a final of 0·275p (0·204p) payable on July 30.

German peak

WEST German share values yesterday hit their 11th successive record high in as many bourse sessions. The Commerzbank index, which is calculated at mid-session, advanced another 3 points to 1,355.

Dealers said that activity was again quite hectic with foreign buying interest continuing heavy. Expectations of lower interest rates and hopes for currency gains again dominated sentiment.

Harrods award

HARRODS' exports are up 80 p.c. to an estimated £100m, according to Prof. Roland Smith, chairman of House of Fraser. He was speaking last night after receiving the Queen's Award for Export.

"Harrods is a magnificent shop window for British goods," he declared. But he declined to comment further on House of Fraser's recent purchase of 5 p.c. of Debenhams.

Maxwell's increase

ROBERT Maxwell, chairman of Pergamon Press, received a 56 p.c. pay rise for 1984. His salary went up from £112,000 to £175,000. In addition one of his companies called Publishing & Databank Consultants is paid $100,000 a year in respect of his services as chairman of Pergamon.

Saxon offer

SAXON OIL, the oil and gas exploration group gazumped last month when Aran Energy stepped in with a last minute shut-out £15·8 million offer for Petrolex, has further extended its £13·4 million bid for Petrolex until June 21.

Aran's bid for Petrolex has been irrevocably accepted by holders of more than 50p.c. of the Petrolex equity. It is, however, conditional on a number of factors, including shareholders' approval for an £11 million right issue to help fund the purchase at an extraordinary meeting called for June 17.

Saxon, which yesterday claimed 11·9p.c. of Petrolex's shares including acceptances of 11·4p.c., is keeping its options open in case Aran's bid fails to clear any of conditions attached to the offer.

Lower interest rate prospects push up pound

By ANNE SEGALL

RISING hopes of an early cut in interest rates dominated financial markets yesterday as the pound surged past the important $1·30 barrier and made substantial gains at the expense of Continental currencies and the yen.

The pound eventually closed at $1·2917 for an overall rise of half a cent on the day. Its average international value rose by 0·2 to 80·5, the highest level for more than a year.

Conditions in London's wholesale money markets were described as "euphoric" as dealers took the view that the strength of sterling would encourage the authorities to overlook the recent overshot in the monetary aggregates, so as to allow a cut of ½ p.c. to 12 p.c. in bank base rates. Optimists were arguing for a cut in rates by the end of the week.

David Kern, chief economist at National Westminster Bank, said yesterday: "The underlying trend in interest rates this year is downward. I would not be surprised to see a ½ p.c. cut to 12 p.c. in base rates quiet soon."

Mr Kern believes rates will fall to 10 p.c. before the year is out.

Elsewhere in the City the mood was one of greater caution, with economists pointing to the weakness of oil prices as an inhibiting factor in the outlook for both sterling and interest rates.

Demand for pounds on the exchanges is being attributed to further evidence of a slowdown in the American economy accompanied by fears that this will encourage another round of interest rate cuts across the Atlantic.

In just wto months the key three-month Eurodollar from 9½ to 7½ p.c., leaving sterling as the only major currency offering an attractive return to investors.

Dealers say that the selling of dollars so far has been modest, but that investors are showing signs of wanting to switch whenever suitable opportunities arise.

"On balance we believe the trend for the dollar is downwards," said a foreign exchange expert.

Hopes for a green light from the authorities on base rate cuts led to a reduction yesterday in the cost of wholesale money in London, with the three-month interbank rate declining from around 12½ p.c. to 12¼ p.c.

In the stock market gilt-edged prices rose by £¾ on average as interest rate hopes fuelled demand for fixed-rate investments.

The Bank of England sold out of the £600 million worth of gilt-edged "taplets" announced on Friday within hours of opening its doors.

Dow seesaws on discount rate hopes

By JAMES SKODES in Washington

WALL Street's share prices seesawed yesterday when talk of further United States interest rate declines offset profit taking momentum.

In the wake of last Friday's record close, it had been expected that the market would open to a round of profit taking, but forecasts calling for both a lower prime rate and another Federal Reserve discount rate drop forced share prices first one way and then the other.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average, which had jumped sharply at the opening bell, retreated quickly in late morning trading. During the afternoon the Row hovered within five points to last Friday's record 1315·41, with investors unable to make up their minds whether to unload or buy. The average of 30 industrial was off 3 points at 1312·14 an hour before the close.

There was no such hesitation in bond markets, however. Prices of government notes soared on speculation that America's banks will cut their prime rates to 9½ p.c. from the current 10 p.c. within the next few weeks. For the past several trading sessions, bond prices have surged forward on expectations that the Federal Reserve will trim another ½ point off its discount rate in order to spur America's still sluggish economy.

Most economists believe the banks' prime rates will come down shortly after the Fed acts, if not before.

The commercial institutions' cost of money has plummeted in recent weeks, putting pressure on the banks to lower the prime rate which is the interest charged prefered corporate customers.

The interest rate speculation touched off a bond market rally that saw the government's bellwether long bond move up 2½ points in early dealings. Although profit taking cut that gain, most government issues were up 1½ to 2 points in late afternoon trading.

On the economic front, the Commerce Department reported that construction spending rose 1 p.c. in April, pushing the construction pace 5·5 p.c. higher than it was a year ago.

Aetna quits EBC deal

MIDLAND Bank hopes of finding a tidy solution to its plans for the sale of European Banking Company have been dashed by news that Aetna Life has pulled out as a potential buyer after much initial enthusiasm.

David Mitchem, an EBC director, said yesterday that Aetna had become a front runner among those seeking to acquire the bank but had decided to rethink its strategy at the last minute.

Midland owns just 14 p.c. of European Banking but is set to acquire full control as part of a deal involving the sale of its 20 p.c. stake in the much larger American consortium bank European American Bank.

Both European Banking and European American Bank belong to the EBIC group of international banks, established in the seventies to provide the partners with a joint approach to international banking.

Midland's desire to sell European Banking reflects a need to raise cash and restructure its balance sheet in the wake of huge losses through Crocker National of California. Midland has also made it clear recently that it sees little merit in owning minority stakes in other banks.

The sale of European Banking to Aetna would have fitted in well with Midland's plan to take full control at Samuel Montagu, the merchant bank in which Aetna has a large minority stake.

Negotiations for the acquisition of Aetna's 40 p.c. holding in Montagu have reached an advanced stage and are expected to involve Aetna keeping Montagu's investment management subsidiary as the price for relinquishing its hold on the rest of the bank.

SE Council lays plans should vote be lost

By BARBARA CONWAY

AS THE Stock Ehange Council braces itself for what may be the liveliest general meeting in its history this afternoon the steering committee co-ordinating opposition to proposals to restructure the stock market is laying provisional plans to call a general meeting of its own.

With growing indications that the council will win the first resolution before today's meeting, which will allo 100 p.c. ownership of member firms by ontsiders, but could still lose the second proposal to change the constitution of the Exchange, the steering committee met yesterday to decide its strategy.

The result was a decision that "if either or both of the resolutions is defeated we will call an immediate general meeting of all members to ask for nominations to stand for the council elections."

The deadline for nominations for the elections is June 11, which means that if the second resolution is defeated the new meeting must be held very quickly. Attendance at the meeting today is expected to be heavy, but the only vote will be a show of hands.

The main vote is tomorrow when those members who have not already sent in their proxies, or who wish to change them, will be able to take part in the formal poll at the Stock Exchange tower.

The constitutional resolution requires 75 p.c. acceptance against a simple majority for that on ownership, and many members who have reluctantly accepted that the first measure cannot be avoided are likely to use the second vote, which is not crucial to the planned changes, as a protest measure.

If the vote is in favour of the resolution, however narrow the margin, the dissidents feel that there will be no point in putting up candidates. "Frankly, if these go through it would be an empty gesture. We would already have lost on all the important points for the future," said a committee member.

CITY COMMENT

A market for investors great and small

THE new gilt-edged market looks set fair for its customers—the Government and the Bank of England on one side, investors large and small on the other. It looks less comfortable for those who will be in the middle, making the market. Still, they are all of them volunteers, and not all who volunteered were chosen.

The Bank examined them at length, first in a written catechism, then viva voce. It seems likely (though the Bank, naturally, will not say) that half a dozen fell out. As many as 31 have come through—subject, in a few cases, to last-minute words with the examiners.

We sall see the list in a fortnight. It will include the London clearing banks, most of the leading merchant banks, discount houses, jobbers, brokers, American banks and securities houses, some entries from Europe but none, so it appears, from Japan.

Compare the present-day market, where more than three-quarters of the turnover is in the hands of two firms. The new market, says the Bank, will be supported by between £600 million and £700 million of capital. That must be double today's figure.

Capital and competition add up to keen pricing. Eleven firms have said that they would deal in "close" prices in long-dated stocks in amounts up to £2·5 million. That implies a spread between their buying and selling prices which will be half, or less, of the spread now prevailing.

That, to the insurance companies and pension funds, is as sweet as the sound of a cash register—but they always expected to do well out of the new market. What is more surprising, and welcome, is to find stalls being set out for the private investor, with ten firms expecting to trade on the market floor, and another five considering it.

They can do this because the 31 market-makers differ as much in their sizes as in their ambitions. Five (no doubt including the provincial jobbers) will have capital of less than £10 million—the Bank has imposed no lower limit, the biggest will have £50 million.

The Bank's tests were designed to make sure that each of them had the resources it needed—in money, in people, and systems—and had a strategy which those resources fitted, most of all, each had to show that it planned to make a market and serve that market's customers, and not just to use a market-maker's facilities by way of playing the gilt-edged game on its own account.

The omens point to a vigorous market, supported by many of the world's best names, easy and economical to use. It is certain to draw in new business, from its home country and from across the world.

Whether it can grow fast enough to reward 31 market-makers and their £600 or £700 million of capital is another story. They were all asked to say what share of the market they expected. The figures should in theory add up to 100 p.c. They added up to between one and a half times as much, and twice as much.

Figuring Fowler

AS IF exhausted by his labours in compiling his Green Paper on the reform of social security programmes yesterday, Mr Fowler refused to go on and put figures on the savings his reforms will produce to help appease the Treasury.

To be fair to him, he has always set more store by simplification and reform than straightforward savings, but so far he has only been able to put a figure of £500 million on the savings from the reform of housing benefit.

If the reform of supplementary benefit is neutral, low-paid people in work are to gain from the changes and the savings from phasing out the State earnings-related pension scheme are essentially longe term, the savings on housing benefit may well be all the Chancellor will get out of the package right away.

The initial reactions to the changes are all predictable, with the TUC and the urban local authorities quick to condemn, the Confederation of British Industries and the Institute of Directors quick to approve, and most insurance companies and pension fund managers wisely abstaining from comment last night.

It is certainly too soon to say who will be winners and who may lose from the proposed changes, at least until future levels of national insurance contributions are known.

The decision to maintain SERPS for men over 50 and women over 45 when the changes take effect in 1987 will reduce the amount of tax relief the Chancellor will have to concede on new private pensions by almost half and avoid the risk of penalising those to old to switch to a private scheme.

Everyone else will have their SERPS entitlements frozen and have to join new private pension schemes. There are transitional arrangements for men between 40 and 50 and women between 35 and 45, and the minimum level of contribution to private additional schemes has been set rather low at 4 p.c. of individual earnings, compared with the 5 p.c. or 6 p.c. normal in existing occupational schemes. Employers will have to contribute at least half the 4 p.c. and the money can go into either conventional pension scheme or, more likely, one of the new portable money-purchase plans for which the Government has been anxious to create room.

Whether employers, employees or the Treasury stand to gain most from the changes depends, however, on the future levels of National Insurance when the three-year transition period is over. If there is no longer a SERPS to contract out of, the reason for reduced national insurance contributions for contracting out disappears.

If, as seems likely, the current top rate becomes standard, the Treasury should not lose, but the existing occupational pension schemes will have cause to complain. If the over-50s have to pay a premium rate to keep their existing benefits, however, they too could still end up losers.

More generally, it must be doubted whether Mr Fowler has indeed devised a "modern social security system to take us into the next century."

The retention of the national insurance contributory principle is already an anachronism in a world of high unemployment and increasing, but interrupted, participation of women in the labour force. With the abolition of the last earnings-related benefit provided by the state, SERPS, national insurance contributions are no more or less than a tax on earnings and should be recognised as such.

In future years, as working patterns become more flexible, a trend the Government wishes to encourage, the distinction between as-of-rights benefits dependent on a contribution record and other means-tested benefits is likely to cause growing irritation, if not resentment.

It also adds unnecessarily to administrative costs. Some 10,000 civil servants who could be better occupied elswhere, are now employed simply to administer contribution records.

And this bureaucratic profligacy will be all the more irritating to the private sector who are being called upon to bear a considerably higher administrative burden.

Opec calls for early talks on oil pricing

THE next full meeting of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries was yesterday brought forward from July 22 to June 30 as the oil glut contines to nthreaten prices.

"I think the possibility of improving the situation is much better now than before," said Sheikh Yamani, the Saudi Arabian minister, after a meeting of Opec's ministerial executive council in Taif.

Manu Said al-Otelba, oil monister for the United Arab Emorates, said Opec htd decided "to defend its prices whatever the cost." But Oman cut $1·20 a barrel off its contract crude prices at $26·15 and backdated it to the start of May.

Polly Peck reveals 3-way merger plans

POLLY PECK yesterday announced details of its proposals to merge with Cornell Holdings and Inter City Investments. The proposed share exchange detals, worth just under £19 million, came two and a half years after Polly Peck first announced that it was about to merge with Cornell.

The terms of the two deals involve the issue of 21 new Polly Peck shares for every 20 outstanding Cornell shares, and one new share in Polly Peck for every five in Inter-City.

With the Polly Peck share prices down 6p at 269p yesterday, that valued each Cornell share at 282·5p, leaving Cornell down 10p at 280p, and Inter-City at just under 54p, with its share price down 2·5p at 52p.

Although the plan itself is no surprise, there was some interest in the fact that the terms value the whole of Inter-City, which made interim profits of £23,000 this year, at £15 million.

Cornell, which turned in interim progts of just under £2 million because of its interest in the Nuksar mineral water project in Sonthern Turkey, is valued at £16·3 million by the Sea Containers forecasts £40m Sealink profit

SEA CONTAINERS expects to reach profits of £40 million a year on Sealink before floating the company on the Stock Exchange in the name of British Ferries, it is disclosed in the annual report.

It bought the shipping and harbours business from British Rail last summer for £66 million. Sealink showed a loss of about £9·2 million for 1984 as a whole, but in less than six months under Sea Containers made a profit of around £12·7 million.

Profits always come in the second half of the year and there was a loss for the first quarter of 1985.

Sea Containers reports its best-ever year in 1984, with net earnings up 74 p.c. at about £53 million.

"The earnings potential from Sealink U K could rival that of the container asset leasing business within three years of having acquired Sealink," says the report. That business showed profit of about £40 million last year.

Cons Gold rises on Kloof find

By COLIN CAMPBELL

CONSOLIDATED Gold Fields' shares initially rose by 15p to 562p before settling back to close at 559p yesterday on confirmation that one of the world's biggest and richest gold mines is to exploit a major new find in South Africa.

Kloof Gold Mining, in which Cons Gold has a beneficial 25 p.c. interest, is to undertake a R453 million (£175 million) expansion following assessment of drilling results to the south and west of its lease area.

The new area is estimated to contain mineable ore reserves of 39 million tons at an average overall grade, in situ, of 10 grams a ton. Though the grade is below analysts' best expectations the new area has the potential, at today's prices, to produce gold worth R3·5 billion.

Kloof will acquire the additional area from the present owners, Gold Fields of South Africa (96·4p.c.), Johannesburg Consolidated Investment (2·9p.c.) and Gold Fields Property (0·7p.c.) in exchange for 35,000 Kloof shares.

Kloof will make a cash refund of R5·5 million for exploration already undertaken, and the vendors will contribute R119·9 million to bring the new Leeudoorn division to production, planned for 1990.

Kloof shares (suspended at £30·5) are to be split on the basis of four-for-one

Dividend Growth

Securities Trust of Scotland's objective is to achieve growth in dividends with a consequent increase in capital value. 1984/5 was another year of significant success, enabling us to increase dividends by 25%, providing shareholders with consistent real income growth as well as substantial capital appreciation.

"In the year to 31st March our twin objectives of growth in income with associated growth in capital was clearly achieved. Earnings per share were up 26% and the net asset value per share rose 18%, both well ahead of the rise in the cost of living."
John Wallace, Chairman.

"Worldwide, equity markets are near peak levels and a period of consolidation seems likely. At the same time, reasonable economic growth with low rates of inflation provides a sound background for well-managed companies."
Robin Young,
in charge of the investment management team.

"We look forward to the rewards of equity investment in a climate of political stability and slightly higher economic growth in 1985."
Joe Scott Plummer, responsible for the U.K. portfolio.

"Overall we do not expect total corporate profits to grow at much more than 5% in the year ahead but there are, and will be, large sections of business in the consumer-orientated service and financial groups which will exceed this figure."
David Skinner,
responsible for the North American portfolio.

"The catalyst for further improvement in share prices will be a change in macro economic factors, such as a decline in Japanese capital outflows, a decline in the oil price or falling interest rates. In the meantime, we are consolidating our holdings in selected Blue Chip companies, which over the longer term offer excellent value."
Keith Falconer,
responsible for the Far East portfolio.

Airflow Streamlines

AIRFLOW Streamlines, where pre-tax profits were £81,000 up at half-time at £281,000, has ended its year with £624,000 against £620,000.

The manufacturing side—cabs for tractors and trucks and pressings and sub-assemblies—made £362,800 (£335,800). The production section's demand and performance improved in the second half despite significant preparation costs for a new product line.

Body engineering, however, was affected by a customer delaying a major programme. The group's motor division maintained its sales at similar levels to 1983-84 but competitive conditions depressed margins and profits slipped £23,100.

Carlton

CARLTON Communications, Europe's largest television facilities group, has weighed in with doubled first half pre-tax profits from £2·37m to £4·86m on a 73 p.c. increase in turnover to £16·4m (£9·4m).

Chairman Michael Green, who in February reported that prospects for the industry continued to be buoyant, says he is confident that the next six months will produce full year results well up to expectations.

The group ended 1983-84 with £5·54m but since then has paid £10·7m for the Californian company Abekas Video Systems and £900,000 for Integrated Holdings. It intends continuing its high level of investment in research and development and is actively pursuing new products.

Earnings are on from equal to 7·11 to 12·72p and the interim dividend is increased from equal to 1·46p to 1·85p, payable July 31.

IN BRIEF

Ault and Wiborg has sold the goodwill of its container coats and metal decorating inks business and the relating technical information to Arthur Holden and Sons for £400,000. There was an operations loss on the business of £378,000 in 1984.

Nolton has agreed to acquire 10 p.c. of the McNally Design Group, a newly formed company which will engage in product design and engineering in a wide range of industrial and commercial applications. The £156,000 consideration will be satisfied by a vendor placing of some 314,000 Nolton shares at 50p each.

BIDS AND DEALS

Halma-Microphax

HALMA, the safety system and environmental control equipment maker, is acquiring Microphax, the Abingdon-based seller and distributor of microfiche readers, for £700,000 satisfied in Ordinary shares.

Microphax, which had pre-tax profits of £82,300 in 1983-84 after salary and pension contributions of £157,600 for its two directors, will form part of Halma's security division.

Samuelson

SAMUELSON GROUP, the film and television services company which raised £5·94m with a rights issue in January, has agreed outline terms for the acquisition of the Australian John Barry Group and its subsidiaries, including a consideration of some A$4m (£2·1m). The deal is subject to approval by the Australian government.

Sydney-based John Barry, which supplies equipment to the film and TV industries and also rents out film production equipment, made A$779,000 (405,000) in the nine months ended March. It ended that period with net assets of A$1·1m (£600,000).

Godfrey Davis

GODFREY Davis (Holdings), already Britain's largest operator of park home residential estates, has now bought the Tower residential park home at Hullbridge, Rayleigh, Essex, for £750,000. Tower's 200 homes takes the group's total to more than 2,900 at 24 residential parks.

Minorco

MINORCO, the Bermuda-based investment group, wil net $402m from the sale of 10m shares n Phbro-Salomon and will use the money to repay all borrowings ($30m) and will hold the balance in the money market, the company announced yesterday.

Turner & Newall

TURNER and Newall·Ferodo's involvement in the European friction materials business will be substantially extended with its planned acquisition of Beral Bremsbelag KG, a West German maker with 1984 sales of £21m.

The consideration is not material in relation to turnover and Newall's total assets, while the deal will give it a production base in a key market.

More O'Ferrall

MORE O'FERRALL, the outdoor advertising group, has agreed with a subsidiary of Reed International to acquire the 50 p.c. of Adshel it does not own. The consideration is £3m, to be satisfied by the issue of 4·41m new Ordinary shares, placed with institutions.

On completion, More will discharge Adshel's debt to Reed of £3m. Adshel, which markets advertising space on bus shelters in Britain, made £1·5m pre-tax in 1984 on turnover of £8·88m.

The weakness in the advertising market has continued and first half profits will show a "marked decline" on last year's £1·2m pre-tax.

The board, however, is achieving higher sales volume at improved prices and expects a recovery from the second quarter onwards.

Cole-Moss

COLE GROUP, in its defence against Robert Moss's £3·09m bid forecasts pre-tax profits for the half-year of around £400,000, of which more than half will come from electronics. These compare with just £54,000 for the corresponding period and £278,000 for the whole of last year. Profits of this order, Cole says, will enable the payment of increased dividends—4p total last time.

John Waddington has, as foreshadowed in March, acquired Eyre and Spottiswoode, commercial printers, for £1·15m, satisfied by 165,700 Ordinary shares and £115,000 cash.

NEW ISSUES

Nordic Inv. Tst

NORDISC Investment Trust's offer of 14m shares at 50p each has been oversubscribed. The basis of allotment wil be announced tomorrow.

THE QUESTOR COLUMN

Dig in with the Anglo American survivors

RIOTS, rand weakness and recession are hardly the background in which to make money. But South Africa's largest mining house, Anglo American, has come through the year ended March and enters the current one with the message: "We are survivors."

Net attributable profits emerge at R880·4 million against R810·1 million and, in a gesture which wil not go unnoticed by those who have watched the rand sink, there is the best dividend increase seen for some years.

But if the rand and the recession made in difficult for its industrial interests, export orientated mining interests—notably gold and coal—have again marched forward.

Within trading profits, up from R252·4 million to R319·1 million, it is Amcoal which can be thanked, while buoyant Johannesburg stock market conditions led to increased trading opportunities, part of the benefits of which were absorbed by higher prospecting expenditure.

Anglo has yet to finalise its Orange Free State gold mines merger plan, the ultimate benefit of which will be more efficient mining operations, though today's developments at rival Gold Fields of South Africa's Kloof gold mine could spur it on.

The long shadow of Charter, Johnson Matthey, Cape Industries and Minorco is also to be seen in 1985 results. There is an extraordinary loss of R65·3 million below the line compared with a previous R64·5 million profit.

The factors which dominated Anglo's life in 1985 will be ever present in 1986, and while the South African economy still struggles much of the positive sentiment which runs for its mining interests will be reduced by the industrial worries. But its spread should still see profits in higher ground, and if so a modest increase in this year's dividend can be expected.

Meanwhile, the shares are supported by a 5 p.c. yield and trade at a 41 p.c. discount to net worth. As a window on to the full spectrum of the South African economy, hold on.

Leading lady's good timing

JENNIFER d'ABO, leading lady in the takeover attempt by Stormgard on Selincourt, will be pleased as punch with the 28·5 p.c. acceptance level the bid attracted at the first closing date.

But those acceptances were the easy ones. The remaining 71·5 p.c. will be much tougher to get hold of, and a lot of fast talking will be needed before Stormgard can chalk up a victory.

There are two main problems. The first is that the cash offer of 26p falls well short of the 30p market price, and so is a non-starter unless it is increased or the market price of Selincourt collapses.

The second is that Stormgard is nothing but a shell company with the promise of institutional support and £600,000 of its own.

Only if it succeeds in acquiring Selincourt will it have substance, and if Selincourt really is on the edge of a recovery why should existing shareholders dilute their interests by allowing Mrs d'Abo and her institutions to take more than 30 p.c. of the benefit.

Mrs d'Abo is best known in the City for picking up stationery group Rymans.

Why she did not put Rymans into Stormgard so that she had a real business, with presumably a high market rating, before bidding for Selincourt is a mystery. Presumably no one thought of it!

It may also have been that she was in too much of a hurry. Selincourt currently looks all-in—shareholders' funds have collapsed to 11p a share, gearing is 300 p.c., a cash injection of at least £5 million is required.

Her timing, in other words, is near perfect. Had she waited Selincourt would have done its own capital raising and would have been able to demonstrate that it was firmly on the recovery road.

Shareholders should, for the moment, sit tight. The d'Abo purse may be opened a little wider, although investors with a short-term view will lose little by selling in the market.

FKI one to watch

WHEREGOEST FKI Electricals now? Straight on down the same growth-by-acquisition trail which has taken it to a fourfold increase in pre-tax profits in as many years.

Having just raised £7 million by way of right the company is sitting on £6·75 million of net cash and is considering its largest purchase yet.

Candidates must have a strong product in the electricals or electronics sector, turnover ranging between £10 million-£20 million, a good gross margin and plenty of scope for improvement in the net margin.

FKI has used the same criteria for all its acquisitions over the last three and a half years and has not slipped up yet. Profits for the year to March 31 have leapt by 54 p.c. to £3.48 million before tax, comfortably beating the £3.3 million rights issue forecast.

Acquisitions which came in for the first time last year included Burndept and Tully Engineering, for eight months apiece and watchmaker Metamec which contributed for two months. Carter Electricals, purchased after the year end, was not included.

The greatest boost to profits last year came from Burndept, a manufacturer of radio communications equipment, and English Numbering Machines which was acquired in the previous year. But there was also steady underlying growth of between 10 p.c-15 p.c. elsewhere.

Current year profitability will depend entirely on how fast and how successfully the company can deploy its rights issue proceeds. It is already discussing two possibilities, both divisions of larger groups, and if it can complete a large purchase by the halfway mark expectations for 1985-86 should soar.

But even on the most conservative assumption, that the cash stays where it is, profits should still climb to about £4·5 million pre-tax where the prospective earnings multiple at 49p is 14·8.

This is one to watch closely. Any suggestion that the rights proceeds have found a happy home and the shares should take off.

Commodities worsen debts burden

THE continuing slide in the price of many soft commodities is placing increasing pressure on the ability of the world's heavily indebted countries to repay their international loans.

Brazil, especially, because of its immense output of agricultural produce is extremely vulnerable to the effect of falling prices.

Sugar is now trading at below 3 cents a pound, less than a quarter of what is costs an efficient grower to produce, and is at its lowest for 15 years.

On the London futures market the October position was quoted yesterday at £98·40 a tonne compared with over £160 a year ago.

On the cocoa market values have dropped by more than £500 a tonne over the past four months putting the September quote at £1,720 a tonne.

Much the same has happened to coffee over the same period with the September quote closing last night at £2,082 a tonne compared with a level or around £2,400 a tonne in February.

Sugar presents a seemingly intractable problem with production increasing and consumption static in the wake of the move in Western countries to the increased use of alternative sweeteners in the manufacturing of soft drinks and food processing.

The problem is aggravated by the majority of producers receiving government protection at least for the output going to the domestic market.

At the same time countries which have been traditionally net importers, such as Russia, are making strenuous efforts to become self-sufficient thus conserving precious foreign currency reserves.

4. Life assurance investment

The Corporation's life assurance subsidiary Anglo American Life Assurance Company Limited merged with The Southern Life Association with effect from April 1 1984 to form The Southern Life Association Limited ("The Southern"). After a proposed public share issue, the Corporation will retain, as a long-term investment, a 40 per cent. (37·5 per cent. voting) interest in the enlarged company. Consequently, the Corporation's investment in the life assurance industry is no longer consolidated but the results of The Southern have been equity accounted and the comparative figures have been adjusted accordingly.

5. It is intended to post the sixty-eighth annual report of the Corporation for the year ended March 31 1985 to members on or about June 27 1985.

FINAL DIVIDEND

On June 3 1985 a final dividend of 100 cents per share (1984: 85 cents) in respect of the year ended March 31 1985 was declared payable on August 6 1985 to holders of ordinary shares registered in the books of the Corporation at the close of business on June 28 1985 and to persons presenting coupon No. 105 detached from share warrants to bearer. This dividend together with the interim dividend of 35 cents a share declared on November 29 1984 makes a total of 135 cents per share for the year (1984: 120 cents). A notice regarding payment of this dividend to holders of share warrants to bearer will be published in the Press by the London Secretary on or about June 14 1985.

The ordinary share transfer registers and the ordinary section of the register of members will be closed from June 29 to July 12 1985, both days inclusive, and warrants will be posted from the Johannesburg and the United Kingdom offices of the transfer secretaries on or about August 5 1985. Registered shareholders paid from the United Kingdom will receive the United Kingdom currency equivalent on July 1 1985 of the rand value of their dividends (less appropriate taxes). Any such shareholders may however elect to be paid in South African currency, provided that the request is received at the offices of the Corporation's transfer secretaries in Johannesburg or in the United Kingdom on or before June 28 1985.

The effective rate of non-resident shareholders' tax is 15·294 per cent.

The dividend is payable subject to conditions which can be inspected at the head and London offices of the Corporation and at the offices of the Corporation's transfer secretaries, Consolidated Share Registrars Limited, 1st Floor, Edura, 40 Commissioner Street, Johannesburg 2001 (P.O. Box 61051 Marshalltown 2107), and Hill Samuel Registers Limited, 6 Greencoat Place, London SW1P 1PL.

CHAIRMEN

Laird Group. Sir Ian Morrow: Remain well placed with adequate cash resources and substantial undrawn borrowing facilities to support further acquisitions. These opportunities, together with internal growth will be pursued vigorously.

Kennedy Brookes (board report). All divisions trading well. Level of trading in both the restaurants and outside catering running significantly above comparative periods.

I. and J. Hyman. Peter Buckley: We were no exception to the general experience that in January business was less buoyant than expected. Subsequently the pace has quickened and indications are that the company should continue to move forward.

Midlands storm over exhibition centre

By BRUCE KINLOCH

A MAJOR row is raging in the West Midlands over the future of land to the north of the National Exhibition Centre.

West Midlands County Council wants to develop the vast site as a high technology business park, but Solihull Council has objected to the proposals and a planning inquiry has begun to decide the issue.

Solihull claims that development of the green belt land would be against local interests and claims that there should be no estate there while inner city land stands vacant.

But there are pressure on the land from another source. The highly successful National Exhibition Centre wishes to expand northwards and to double its existing one million sq. ft. of space.

The NEC is profitable and attracting business away from some other European exhibition sites. But it cannot compete with some major centres.

For example, the Hanover Fair occupies four million sq. ft of exhibition space and there are many other major shows which cannot be staged at Birmingham.

So the inquiry is hearing evidence that the development proposed by West Midlands council will prevent expansion by the NEC. It will also be told the details of a rival planning application from Arlington Securities, which says it can develop a park without limiting the exhibition centre.

Arlington, whose chairman is Lord Keith of Castleacre, has asked for permission to build 2·5 million sq. ft of high-tech buildings on 148 acres, with a further 47 acres of amenity zone, in a green wedge which would protect Solihull from industrial encroachment. This amenity zone is in addition to the normal heavy landscaping which Arlington provides in its parks.

The West Midlands county planning officer is quoted as saying that firms wishing to set up on the Council's proposed high technology estate would be vetted to see if they could be sited elsewhere in the West Midlands to make use of older industrial areas.

But Lord Keith says the planner must be living in an unreal world. "High technology companies have many alternative places they can go to; and by and large they have no interest in the older industrial areas," he told the inquiry, adding: "If West Midlands does not provide them with what they want they will look elsewhere."

For the second time in recent weeks the Prime Minister has been dragged into a planning row. In this case, Ian Mills, Tory MP for Meriden, wrote to here voicing the concern of his constituents.

But Mrs Thatcher's reply did little to allay fears. She told Mr Mills that the planning system must avoid placing unjustified obstacles in the way of any development which would help in the country's regeneration.

This reply, in the middle of the planning inquiry, prompted a Conservative councillor, Peter Kellie, to say that he hoped the Environment Secretary was not a puppet on a string and was capable of making up his own mind after reading the inquiry report.

"It concerns me," said Mr Kellie, "as a matter of general principle, that the Prime Minister should be getting unnecessarily involved in a controversy when one of her own department will be deciding the outcome."

What is perfectly clear is that Arlington, which can be said to be the foremost developer of science parks in this country, has expertise that is not available to the West Midlands council.

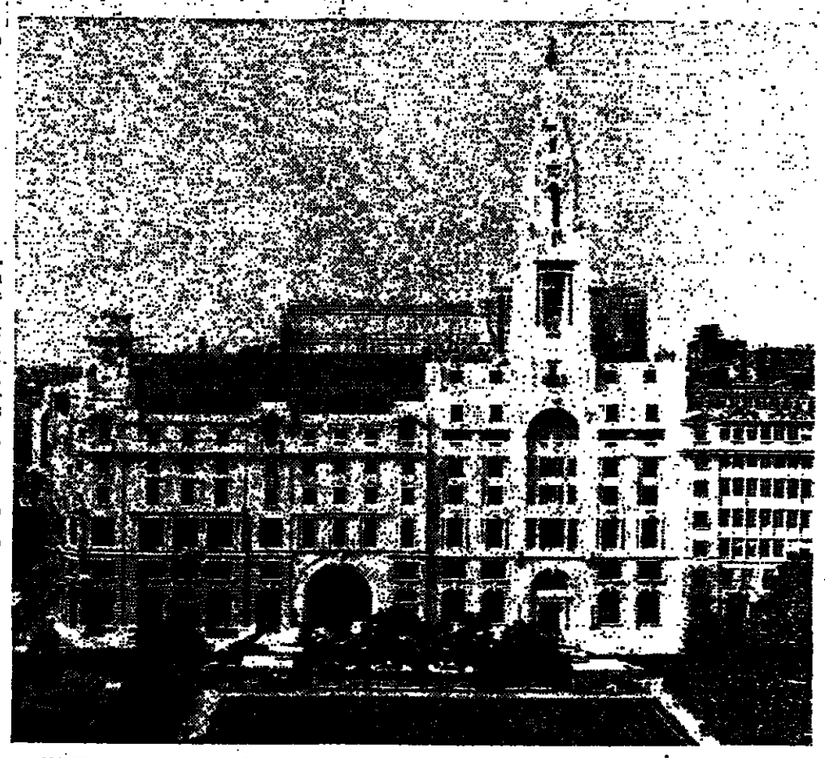
It has proved in the past that parks it develops, and even tenants are attracted to the though it has not yet won approval for its proposals there is already strong tenant interest through its worldwide contacts.

Piccadilly site — by tender

LAND Securities has taken the unusual step of asking its agent Conrad Ritblat to let by tender the prime retail pitch beneath the famous lights in central Piccadilly.

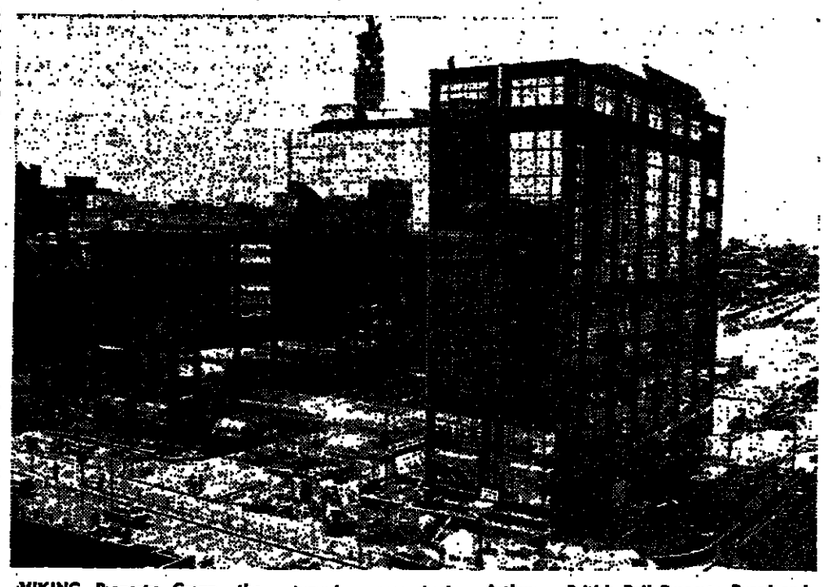
Having bought in the leases on 1, 3, 5 and 7 Shaftesbury Avenue the property company has refurbished the shops to provide a single store of 2,000 sq. ft at ground floor and a 50ft window frontage to Piccadilly Circus. 2,000 sq. ft trading area in the basement and possibly a further 2,000 sq. ft on a specially built mezzanine floor.

Such is the demand that market speculation expects the rent to be in excess of £300,000.



HARD on the heels of the letting to the Stock Echange of some 18,000 sq. ft in Triton Court, Finsbury Square, in the City of London, (above) comes a deal involving the Roux restaurant chain which is to lease and operate the ground floor catering accommodation.

Roux, which already owns The Poulbot in Cheapside, is best known for Le Gavroche and the Waterside Inn at Bray. The letting of the restaurant space will be seen as a major coup by Royal London Mutual Insurance Society which owns the £60 million complex.



KEW Campus, a modern office development on the Thames riverside at Kew is taking shape and the marketing of the 60,000 sq.ft project by Higgs & Hill Developments will soon by handled by Dunphys and Richard Ellis.

Fast revival in direct property investments

THERE are signs that the direct property investment market is reviving at a faster pace than it receded three years ago and many believe that it will be the shortage of stock, rather than a lack of demand, that will stop the financial institutions repeating the record levels of investment in property achieved in 1984.

According to the latest investment report from estate agents Healey & Baker the strongest activity in the early months of 1985 has been that relating to properties whose characteristics fell marginally short of meeting the criteria of prime and where, in consequence, slightly higher initial returns were available.

Currently, according to the firm, initial returns on prime town centre shops are 3·65 p.c., with offices yielding 4·75 p.c., factories and warehouses 7·25 p.c., high-tech buildings 6·75 p.c. and retail warehouses 6·75 p.c.

Such returns are the rates at which pension funds, insurance companies and other institutions are willing to buy properties in the best locations let to substantial tenants on leases containing modern covenants with frequent rent reviews.

In the fourth quarter of 1984 the financial institutions invested £876 million in property, which is the highest quarterly figure ever recorded. Sales amounted to £290 million.

Paul Orchard Lisle, a partner of Healey & Baker, believes that 1985 will be a year of great activity. He said: "A small number of first-time investors are known to be buying and some substantial superannuation funds that have in property-investment terms, been dormant for some time are back in the market place, perhaps reflecting that the stock market is unlikely to show such significant gains in the next few years as have been experienced recently."

He thinks that over the next two or three years there will be continuing large volumes of sales by institutions, reflecting not their disenchantment with direct property investment but rather to allow a realignment of investments into the newer more specialist banks of property, including high-tech buildings and retail warehousing.

Raybeck sells in Regent St

IN ONE of the biggest single shop deals in central London, Raybeck has sold its long leasehold interest in the property at 256-258 Regent Street, Oxford Circus, to Laura Ashley for £21,55 million.

Recently trading as Events, but formerly Lady at Lord John and Lord John the shop has a floor area of 11,500 sq. ft. Teacher Marks which acts for Raybeck said that a major part of the property is held on a long lease at a rent of £22,000 a year.

Milton Keynes topping out

THE first phase of the Milton Keynes Central Business Exchange, a £40 million development integrating office, retail, catering and leisure uses, has been topped out, on target after 18 months of the 30 month contract.

The first phase consists of two six-storey buildings overlooking open space in central Milton Keynes with a total floor area of 264,500 sq. ft.

Norwich into Ropemaker St

NORWICH Union is leading the institutions back to the direct property investment market. The group's chief general manager Victor Hughff, had forecast that at least £200 million would be invested by the company in property during 1985, and last week it signed an agreement to invest £75 million in a single development, the highest sum it has ever placed in a single investment.

This huge investment is in the Ropemaker Street project of London and Metropolitan Estates, a joint company owned by London & Edinburgh Trust and Balfour Beatty. A building contract worth £27 million was also placed with Balfour Beatty last week.

The 255,000 sq. ft office development in the City will have a fully completed and let investment value of £100 million. Norwich Union has acquired the freehold interest of the project and granted a long leaseback to London & Metropolitan under which the developers will retain an equity stake on a side-by-side basis.

The building has been designed by the Covell Matthews Wheatley Partnership in anticipation of the financial amalgamations which are being brought about by the forthcoming relaxation of the rules of the Stock Exchange.

One of the interesting details of the development is the fact that London & Metropolitan will act as the project managers. Two men have already been taken on to oversee the entire development.

In recent years there has been a trend towards awarding project management contracts to estate agents, but now there is a move away from agent based project management.

VIKING Property Group, the Derby-based company headed by Brian Ashby will today formally hand over to the Civil Aviation Authority Pension Fund and the tenant, accountants Arthur Young, Rolls House, Colmore Row, Birmingham (above), a 41,000 sq. ft office building.

Held on a long lease from British Rail Property Board and Birmingham City Council by Viking the site has been developed into a £6 million project.

Beaver House facade to be preserved

THE City planners won the day t Beaver House, Queen Victoria Street, and the 1920s facade has been preserved, or rather it has been carefully dismantled in order to be re-erected inside the new £40 million building which will be the headquarters for the London-based operations of the Royal Bank of Canada and for Orion Royal Bank, the Royal's wholly-owned merchant banking subsidiary.

The 200,000 sq. ft. development is being carried out by Markborough Properties in conjunction with the Royal Bank. Markborough, which is headed by Peter Anker, a former managing director of MEPC, is a subsidiary of Hudson's Bay Company.

For the first 200 years of its life the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England Trading into Hudson's Bay had its headquarters on the site and until very recently the building has had ties with the fur trade.

RAINBOW QUEST HEADS 10 FOR 'CORONATION'

By HOTSPUR (Peter Scott)

RAINBOW QUEST, Gold and Ivory and the French-trained Strawberry Road head 10 acceptor s for Thursday's Coronation Cup at Epsom. Ilium, who won the Yorkshire Cup on soft ground, and Old Country have also been left in.

Circus Plume, last year's Oaks winner, began this season with the Coronation Cup as an objective but disappointed in her reappearance race at Newmarket last month. She and the injured Gay Lemur have both been withdrawn.

Long Pond, winner of Epsom's Blue Riband Trial Stakes in April, 1984, and Rough Pearl, who has not yet shown top form this season, may be in Thursday's field.

Rainbow Quest, so impressive at Goodwood 13 days ago, is again likely to have his stable-companion August as pace-maker.

Gold and Ivory, successful in big races at Cologne and Milan last autumn, began this season with a Newbury win but he proved no match for Rainbow Quest in the 1984 Great Voltigeur Stakes at York.

Law Society and Lester Piggott's Derby mount Theatrical have both arrived from Ireland for tomorrow's classic.

Cecil delays

Charles St George and Henry Cecil, Lanfranco's owner and trainer, have again reviewed the question of his running.

This had appeared certain at the weekend but Cecil said last night that with rain forecast, it is possible that a final decision will not be made until the morning of the race.

Mark Kershaw, Epsom's clerk of the course, decided not to water yesterday because the weather forecast suggested heavy showers.

Mr Kershaw says that if the forecast turns out wrong, the last six furlongs of the Derby course may be watered today. "There is an excellent covering of grass and an eight-yard strip nearest the far rails will provide ground that was not used at the April meeting," he said.

Another is Barry Hills, whose Royal Harmony was even more disappointing than Reach when both were well beaten behind Damister on soft ground in last month's Mecca-Dante Stakes at York.

Royal Harmony, third to Reach in the Royal Lodge Stakes, finished fourth in Shadeed's 2,000 Guineas this spring before running so badly at York. His odds shortened yesterday from 50-1 to 33-1 and Shadeed is now down to 11-4.

David O'Brien may accept for Saturday's Oaks with both Triptych and Alydar's Best at the declaration stage today. Coral's have shortened Helen Street's price from 25-1 to 16-1.

Christopher Poole, the LONDON STANDARD racing correspondent, is in hospital recovering from heart surgery three days ago.

Course Notes & Hints

PETROVICH IS BEST

By Our Course Correspondent

PAT EDDERY, who rode three winners at the corresponding Salisbury meeting last season, is expected to complete a double there today with PETROVICH* and Modanite.

Petrovich tackles the Durnford Handicap (2.30) following his reappearance at Newbury, where he finished seventh to Tyrollie after rearing up at the start.

Richard Hannon's gelding has been lightly raced, winning once from four starts. He should have benefited from that seasonal run and appears on a handy mark.

Modanite, an expensive yearling, is expected to make amends for two disappointing runs this season in the Tryon Handicap.

Full of Ale is fancied to make a winning reappearance in the Bishopstone Selling Handicap (2.0), and Absent Lover may defy a 5lb penalty to complete a hat-trick in the Hofmeister Lager Handicap (3.0).

JARVIS SET TO OPEN ACCOUNT

By Our Resident Correspondent

William Jarvis, Newmarket's newest trainer, is fancied to open his account today when Dorset Cottage tackles the Kings Head Maiden Stakes (Div. I) at Beverley. He was narrowly beaten last time at Pontefract, with the rest at least five lengths away.

SALISBURY: 2.30 Brown Bear Boy; 3.0 Sidab; 4.0 Another Jose; 4.30 El Raggaas.

BEVERLEY: 3.15 Admirable; 4.15 Dorset Cottage (nap); 4.45 Rest; 5.10 Redreed.

LINGFIELD PARK: 6.0 Cool Gales; 6.30 New Express; 7.0 El Gitano; 8.0 Heart of Stone; 8.30 High Skies.

Yesterday's Racing

Royal Suitor fools odds-on backers

JOE MERCER was the central character in the defeat of two odds-on chances at Folkestone yesterday, when he helped to foil Magic Island by winning on stablemate Royal Suitor but was beaten into third place on Luqman.

Royal Suitor, making his debut, raced home five lengths clear in the colours of Sheikh Mohammed in the Barham Maiden Stakes, while Magic Island, also trained by Guy Harwood, was pipped by For A Lark for second place.

Harwood's stable has been hit by the cough and his assistant Geoff Lawson said: "Our horses have been pulling our legs at home so we didn't have a clue which was the better."

There was no doubting the strength of Luqman, who was having his fifth outing of the season and started 5-1 on for the Metropole Challenge Cup, but he failed badly as Camilla's Boy and Hymn of Harlech raced to a photo-finish three lengths clear.

Luqman offender

At the third attempt the course announcer settled for the result of Camilla's Boy having beaten Hymn of Harlech by a short head. The first two cost a combined total of one-fifth the 45,000 gns that Sheikh Mohammed's brother Hamdan Al-Maktoum paid for Luqman, who hampered the winner a furlong out but was allowed to keep third place because the result was not affected.

Camilla's Boy completed a double for trainer Mark Usher, whose Impstone Lady took the Levy Board Apprentices' Handicap by five lengths to give James Carter his fourth riding success.

Make Me Happy, runaway winner at Sandown Park last week, followed up in the Link Paper Handicap, slipping four lengths clear in record time.

There was no luck for British runners overseas yesterday. Sharp Romance, trained by Kim Brassey, was third to Committed in the Ballyogan Stakes at Leopardstown, and at Auteuil the hurdlers Bajan Sunshine, Aonoch and Out of the Gloom were well beaten.

Committed showed a good turn of foot at the furlong mark but tired near the post and finished a neck up on the three-year-old Aberuschka, with Sharp Romance three lengths further back. Committed was one of three winners for Dermot Weld, following five for the stable on Saturday at Phoenix Park.

Bajan Sunshine (Peter Scudamore) and Aonoch (Jimmy Duggan were seventh and eighth behind Daniel Wildenstein's Video Tape in the Prix la Barka. Out of the Gloom finished ninth of 12 in the Prix de Longchamp.

Horse Trials

DIVERS ROCK ON SIDELINES

By ALAN SMITH

MARY THOMSON'S Divers Rock, who gained most points in British horse trials last year, has navicular disease and will miss at least the rest of the season.

Miss Thomson, 23, and her 11-year-old were put on the long list for September's European championships after finishing seventh at Badminton, but he has been lame on and off since then.

X-rays taken at Newmarket's Equine Research Station revealed the disease in a small bone in the foot. Tests in the next four weeks with determine if there is any hope of his competing again.

This is desperately bad luck for Miss Thomson, a talented and hard-working young rider on the verge of reaching the top, but her sponsors, the Carphone Group, have said they will continue to support her.

There is better news for Diana Clapham, the Olympic rider, who is to be sponsored by the animal health section of Fisons to cover training and competition expenses and the cost of a box for her five horses.

Third One-Day International

By MICHAEL CAREY at Lord's

DAVID GOWER emerged from his unproductive spell as England captain by making 102 from 118 balls at Lord's yesterday and, with Graham Gooch making 117 not out, Australia were beaten by eight wickets in the final Texaco Trophy match.

The capacity crowd rose to Gower, as if identifying with his long and lonely struggle for form, both at home and abroad, since taking over the leadership a year ago.

He had, in fact, played some innings in all forms of crickets without reaching three figures, and had made only three half-centuries as captain. Hitherto, his highest score in one-day internationals in this period was a modest 38.

Perhaps reassured by a message from Peter May, the chairman, that the selectors' faith in him was undiminished, Gower looked more or less at ease after playing and missing a couple of times early on.

Thereafter he showed great discretion around the off stump, rediscovered his timing, and had hit 14 fours and a six when he was out in the 44th over with victory assured. There could be no other choice as man of the match.

Gooch, who was dropped at 71, scored his second successive century and took his aggregate for the three games to 286. He and Allan Border, the Australian captain, were named the men of the series.

Earlier, Graeme Wood, another left-hander who had found form elusive, made an unbeaten 114, his highest score of the tour, which enabled Australia to overcome early problems with the pitch and make 254 for five.

The sight of a grassier than usual pitch encouraged England to play Foster instead of Edmonds and, logically, to bowl first after winning the toss, although the morning was hot and sunny.

Immediate reward

They were immediately rewarded when Hilditch, who had replaced the unfit Wessels, was lbw playing across a full-length ball from Foster and for a while Australia's progress was unsurprisingly tentative.

Although the ball moved about, sometimes lavishly, it proved to be one of those mornings when it tended to pass the bat rather than find its edge with Cowans, during eight successive overs, performing particularly well.

Oddly enough, he was not seen again. Nor was this a reflection of England's efficiency for neither Foster nor Allott was subsequently at their best and rather more bowling was required from Willey than might have been exposed on this pitch.

Narrow escape

In an uncharacteristically devil-may-care start he went down the pitch to slog Allott for four. Attempting a repeat he all but lost his off stump when only five—such, Allott must have reflected, is the slender margin between success and failure.

Woods, meanwhile, gradually went past his previous highest score of the tour, 48, looking more confident once the ball had stopped moving around and clearly realising the importance of a long innings.

This he was able to achieve, although he should have been stumped off the last ball of the innings off Willey. Australia's progress towards the end owed much to a pugnacious innings by Boon, who made 45 from 47 balls.

He then gave himself room to attack Willey and produced a skier which was caught by Gower, though the ball was in the air long enough for the England captain's past life (or possibly his future) to have flashed before his eyes. As it happened, he need not have worried.

ROBERTS TO THE RESCUE

By MICHAEL AUSTIN at Derby

BRUCE ROBERTS, showing an unwavering zest for attack, scored a maiden first class century against Gloucestershire yesterday as Derbyshire exchanged the possibility of following on for the rich opportunity of a last innings run chase at Derby.

Roberts, 23, an England-qualified Zambian who lived in Zimbabwe for 12 years, confirmed that his resemblance to Eddie Barlow, a distinguished former Derbyshire captain, was in more than just appearance as he batted with panache.

Finney, who scored a two hour career-best 82, supported Roberts in a fifth-wicket stand of 169 in 35 overs. Derbyshire rallied from 206 for four, with Hill unable to bat because of a swollen left knee, to a declaration at 381 for five.

Gloucestershire scored 95 for one, an overall lead of 110, but the game's destiny will depend on the timing of Graveney's declaration today on a bountiful pitch for batsmen.

David Graveney ... faces a big decision today.

The bespectacled Roberts hooked two sixes off Walsh and hit 12 fours, mostly driven, to reach a century off 116 balls in 146 minutes—and frustrate Graveney, who bowled a tidy 31 overs spell of left-arm spin in the afternoon.

Russell dropped Roberts, on 88, at the wicket off Graveney, but otherwise little disturbed the soothing authority of Derbyshire's strokeplay and Lloyds dismissed Barnett and Morris in an over.

Earlier, Maher's worthy nightwatchman's innings ended in a edged catch. Barnett, having added a second half century to two centuries in seven championship innings, drove languidly over a ball which turned enough to suggest that spin will play a growing part in Gloucestershire's plans today.

Stovold's familiar, forthright strokeplay eased Gloucestershire's anxieties after Romaines hishooked a catch, well taken by Mortensen. Athey survived a slip chance to Roberts but a pitch, emerald green on Saturday, had offered bowlers false promise.

Green's century has Sussex well on top

By REX ALSTON at Horsham

ANOTHER high scoring sunny day on Horsham's lovely country ground left Sussex in a commanding position yesterday. They bowled out Surrey for 271, giving them a lead of 120. They then set about Surrey's 2nd XI attack, and the runs flowed.

Only Pocock and Thomas remain of Surrey's regular bowlers, to whom Jesty must now be added. A good wicket encouraged the stroke-play.

Jesty's batting had illuminated the morning's play. The youthful Green now added a second century in successive matches to his first innings 90, and Sussex ended the day 314 runs ahead with eight wickets.

Surrey, having lost their opening pair and a night watchman overnight, had much to do in replying to Sussex's 391 for seven. The immediate objective was to reach 242 and thus save the follow-on.

With only three runs added, Thomas made no stroke to a rising ball and was lbw, and this brought in Jesty, Surrey's main hope. The bowling of Pigott and Reeve was lively, but Stewart and Jesty were soon driving effortlessly through the covers.

Then surprisingly Stewart was dismissed by Reeve, and the crucial partnership between Lynch and Jesty began. All went well for Surrey for a time as both batsmen looked well set. But Sussex persevered, and Greig disposed of Lynch.

A big responsibility now rested on Needham as he joined Jesty. He rose to the job with good, sensible batting, while nothing seemed to disturb the immaculate Jesty.

At lunch, the 200 was up, and Surrey's target looked well within reach. Needham, however, did not last long afterwards, and Jesty had reached 99 when he was out to a stupendous catch at square leg, worthy of Peter Shilton at his best.

Jesty hit a rising ball firmly and Parker took off sideways and held the ball shoulder-high, with both feet off the ground. Richards saw Surrey safely past the follow-on, and Pigott ended the innings by taking the last two wickets in two balls.

Jesty's innings occupied 145 minutes and contained a six and 17 fours. With their comfortable lead Sussex then piled on the pressure. Mendis and Green put on 84 for the first wicket in just under an hour, before Mendis miscued and short extra cover took an easy catch.

At the other end Green continued his recent good form, hitting 11 fours in his first 50, mostly fine drives. The Surrey bowling, smitten by injuries, was meat and drink to him and he reached his century in 157 minutes with 17 fours.

Parker this time failed, but Alan Wells proved an admirable partner for the prolific Green, and these two young players added 70 in their unfinished partnership.

CAUTION PAYS FOR BRIERS

By D. J. RUTNAGUR at Chelmsford

CENTURIES by Nigel Briers, extremely dogged, and Paddy Clift, with a 51 in between by Mike Garnham, gave Leicestershire a score of 392 for 7 declared against Essex yesterday and a lead of 179.

Batting as if highly suspicious of a pitch that was slow and somewhat uneven in bounce, Leicestershire, resuming at 87 for 3, used 114 overs to add 305. Their caution seemed justified when, in Essex's second innings, Hardie immediately met a ball from Agnew that shot through low and bowled him.

BOYCOTT HITS BACK WITH 115

By DEREK HODGSON at Middlesbrough

GEOFFREY BOYCOTT, dropped and therefore missing from Yorkshire's remarkable victory on Sunday, replied in characteristic fashion yesterday by scoring 115 against Hampshire, the Britannia Championship leaders, at sunlit Acklam Park.

It was Boycott's second century in successive Championship matches and the 145th of his career. He had to face Marshall in three spells, two of them fairly fierce, before succumbing in the fourth, after 280 minutes. He hit 16 fours. Boycott is now level with Frank Wooley among the centurians.

Marshall shared the honours, taking five for 48, his best so far this season. He was the one cutting edge that Nicholas was able to call upon whenever Yorkshire's increasingly formidable batsmen threatened to take control.

Marshall's bowling just before and after tea ensured a Hampshire lead of 58, which had been increased to 121 by the close for the loss of Terry and Greenidge.

Boycott and Bairstow—Bairstow hit 47 off 55 balls—made hay against the spinners until Marshall returned in deadly fashion before tea to take three wickets in nine balls, and Boycott's almost immediately after the interval.

Hall fighting hard for Test fitness

By JOHN MASON in Invercargill

THOUGH John Hall, the England flank forward from Bath, could not play against Southland in Invercargill earlier today because of an injury to his right knee, he expects to resume full training tomorrow before flying to Wellington.

The final tour game of seven is against New Zealand on Saturday, and Hall, whose tour accomplishments have included the growth of an impressive black beard, dearly wants to be on the field when England attempt to square the series.

Hall got a knock during the Christchurch international last Saturday and was ruled out of selection for the Southland match, nor did he train yesterday

Bitter regrets

Hall and his colleagues bitterly regret that a splendid opportunity to beat New Zealand was there for the taking in Christchurch.

"We know, obviously, where and what went wrong," said Mr Derek Morgan, the manager, yesterday. "But we ignore blinkered, unreasonable comment. There were problems about the type of possession England won and our ability to apply pressure.

New Zealand teams, even those thought not to be especially strong, know instinctively about pressure situations. The players grow up with that sort of thing in their game—it's a kind of second nature for them which you must admire."

Careered about

The flight from Christchurch to Invercargill was full, and the appearance of a 30-plus-strong group of players and officials caused a weight problem. Paul Huntsman, not the best of flyers, eagerly volunteered to get off. Instead, luggage, most of it English, was removed from the hold.

"The way everything has worked out, in fact, has been very pleasing," added Mr Morgan, as England's players careered about Oreti Park on the distant outskirts of Invercargill after lunch yesterday, the kit having been returned to them during the morning.

"Saturday was a bruising effort in so many ways, physical and mental. Reactions set in and players became jaded. But now, 48 hours later, they want to work. That might not have been the case this morning."

The Southland match today also signalled the return to active duty of John Goodwin, Moseley's try-scoring wing, who was injured a fortnight ago at Gisborne. Remarkably, in the final week of a demanding tour, only Hall, at the last count, was not available for selection.

"I'm available for interviews, matches, training sessions, jet-boating, helter-skelter chutes at swimming pools, or anything else you care to name, 24 hours a day," insisted Bob Hesford, the self-appointed chief executive of an organisation called Bob's Alternative Tours.

"Quite right, too," declared Mr Morgan, his smile as broad as that of Hesford, the mid-week captain last week. "There's a spirit and humour in this England party which is as much invigorating as it is in order.

"I've been asked at times why I permit the Alternative Tours joke because, I suppose, those not used to touring don't always understand the competitive pressures at this level. In many ways, the off-the-field work of characters like Bob is the safety valve.

Cooke accolade

"I don't think some realise quite how tense these players can become or appreciate the effort—psychological, physical and mental—that is involved. All players are ambitious, and if their hopes are dashed, they need outlets. The humour of the Hesfords is a bonus.

"When I announce the side for the last match, the international, there will be 11 pretty fed-up players in this party—and remember that the five who are not required as replacements will be putting their boots away for the last time on this trip.

"I would expect them to relax in these circumstances ... just as long as I've a general idea of where or what they might be doing. What pleases me most is that Southland was not thought of as just another match to complete the list. Those selected wanted to play."

The last of Mr Morgan's medals yesterday went to David Cooke, who was captain against Southland. The appointment, said the manager, with a quiet seriousness in contrast to previous light-hearted quips, was a way of saying "thank you" for Cooke's efforts back home and on tour.

Abrahams & Patterson punish Oxford

By A. S. R. WINLAW at Oxford

PATRICK PATTERSON, a fast bowler in the old style, took a career-best seven for 49 at Lancashire dismissed Oxford University for 144 on a good batting batting pitch in The Parks yesterday.

Lancashire, with a first-innings lead of 194, did not enforce the follow-on. Watkinson hit a powerful 59, and Abrahams completed his first hundred of the season in the last over as Lancashire reached 223 for two—a lead of 417.

Lancashire have long been seeking a bowler of real pace, and the Jamaican Patterson came to the county on the recommendation of Clive Lloyd. He played only once last year, but his value has been firmly endorsed at Oxford.

Lancashire are now faced with a handsome if embarrassing choice for their one overseas-registered player: Patterson, Clive Lloyd, or the South African all-rounder, Stephen Jefferies.

Immediate trouble

Oxford started the morning at 37 for two, and Patterson caused immediate trouble, removing Hagan and Tooley in the first over. Here was fast, accurate bowling, and after Thorne and MacLarnon had resisted with 30 runs for the fifth wicket, Patterson continued the collapse in taking all the first six wickets to fall. It was 74 for six.

When Patterson, then with six for 24, took his sweater after 70 minutes, Watkinson soon struck at the other end, and Oxford went into lunch at 116 for eight. But a batsman of note remained in Thorne, who in this meagre total had played a faultless innings of 65.

Thorne played with perfect temperament and—most important against Patterson—with the straightest of bats. When Patterson came off, he hit Makinson in successive overs with classical strokes, of cover drive, straight drive and on-drive, to the boundary.

After lunch, Thorne and Quinlan produced the highest partnership of the Oxford ru runnings 41 for the ninth wicket, before Thorne was bowled for 76.

Thorne, alas, has not bowled in this match because of a back injury and the University attack dearly misses his left-arm medium-pace. When Lancashire batted again, Abrahams and Watkinson scored 55 for the first wicket, and Watkinson went on to hit 10 fours and two sixes in his 59.

Worcester have edge despite Tavare's 60

By DOUG IBBOTSON at Canterbury

A WICKET of irregular bounce and variable pace at Canterbury yesterday offered something between a test of character and a lottery, which in terms of probability at least finally favoured Worcestershire rather than Kent.

At the end of the day in which 18 batsmen were dismissed, Worcestershire, with eight wickets intact, had scored 31 of the 132 runs needed for victory. Their task would have been considerably easier but for the resolute Chris Tavare's 60 in Kent's second-innings 146.

The peculiarities of the wicket accompanied a certain lack of application by both sides, especially Kent, who in the morning were less than impressive in the field.

Worcestershire, who resumed at an overnight 115 for four, were soon in difficulties as Jarvis, with an excellent eight-over spell of three for 14, removed Smith Patel and d'Oliveira.

By the time Kent had erased Worcestershire's modest lead they had lost Taylor, Hinks, Cowdrey and Baptiste—the first three lbw to balls that skidded through shin high.

SMITH LEADS RUN CHARGE

By DAVID GREEN at Taunton

THE Taunton run glut abated only slightly yesterday as Warwickshire replied to Somerset's daunting 566 for five with 442 for 9 declared. In the final 10 minutes Somerset lost Bail in extending their lead to 135.

Consistency was the key for Warwickshire. Andy Lloyd made 61 while Dennis Amiss (81) and Paul Smith (93, a championship best) shared in a fourth-wicket stand of 161 in two hours and Anton Ferreira made a handsome unbeaten 101.

National Village Club Championship

Aymes & Wright on mark for Hursley

By JOHN FOGG

HURSLEY Park came safely through to the Hampshire semi-finals of the National Village Championship on Sunday with a comfortable eight-wicket victory over historic Hambledon with overs to spare.

Hursley's heroes were their young opening pair of Adrian Aymes and Paul Wright, who came so close to winning the national final for their club at Lord's last year. Hambledon made 104 for eight in their 40 overs and then Aymes (54) and Wright (41) put on 102, at which score both were dismissed.

Longparish, defeated at Lord's in 1980 also by Marchwiel of Clwyd, play Hursley on Sunday week, after defeating Steep by 52 runs. Dennis Luff scored 76 of Longparish's 201 for seven and, despite a brave 71 from Chris Goles, Steep were held to 149 for six.

Oxford Downs recovered from being 17 for four when Simon Florey (92) and Bob Lowe (42) added 118 for the fifth wicket. This 40-overs total of 205 for nine was 57 too many for Aston Rowant, who were all out for 148 with Lowe taking two of the wickets.

Team effort

In the Sussex group, Ardingly and Barcombe each won on Sunday. Ardingly's 155 for nine was a good team effort and then Andy Whetstone their off-spinner, took five for 19 to dismiss Colemans Hatch for 105 in the 32nd over.

Balcombe batted first at Barcombe and made 153 for seven, but the reigning, Sussex champions passed the target with five wickets to spare.

Keith Savage (74), and Kelvin Spiers put on 113 for Barcombe, whose captain Ian Newman was able to have an easier day after taking 10 for 28 in a Sussex League game on Saturday.

In West Essex Langley cruised to victory by 10 wickets over Elsenham whom Barry Wilson and David Rowe had bowled out for 86. Graham Hancock (62) and Gerald George (24) made the 87 needed and on a perfect day Langley went on to win a 10-overs-a-side beer match.

Horndon-on-the-Hill play Langley in the group semi-finals after defeating Roxwell (155-8) by nine wickets

Alcohol ban by Board

THE British Boxing Board of control have banned alcohol from being sold inside Queens Park Rangers' ground on Saturday when Ireland's Barry McGuigan challenges Eusebio Pedroza of Panama, for the world featherweight title.

"We understand there were plans for the bars to be open until 9.30 p.m. (the fight is due to start at 10 p.m.) and we have told the promoters that no drink may be sold at all that night," the Board Secretary, Ray Clarke, said yesterday.

Move by Burns

It is the first time alcohol has been banned from any boxing tournament in this country.

Meanwhile the Board have made another protest about the nomination of a European featherweight title opponent for McGuigan.

The European Boxing Union have installed Spaniard Jose Luis Vico as the Irishman's next challenger—even though he has not fought for a year.

The EBU are also being asked by Sam Burns, manager of Tony Sibson, to change their decision to relieve Sibson of the European middleweight title, for failing to defend it in Copenhagen on June 15.

If the move by Burns fails, Ugandan-born Jane Aynb Kalule may fight Britain's Hero Graham for the vacant title.

AKABUSI, 26, STEPS UP

KRISS AKABUSI, 26, was yesterday named the first black captain of a British athletics team.

Akabusi, an Army sergeant from Southampton, will lead England in the men's international against the United States at Birmingham on June 21.

Paddington-born Akabusi, a member of the Southampton Club, won the UK 400 metres title last year and helped Britain's 4 x 100 metres relay squad to win a silver medal in the Lost Angeles Olympics.

Haringey's John Isaacs, who coaches some of the country's top sprinters and who has criticised Britain's athletics authorities for a lack of recognition for black coaches, has been appointed sprints coach for the match.

Meanwhile, Wendy Sly, Britain's 3,000 metres Olympic silver medallist, faces an uncertain summer after being forced to drop out of the Gaymer's Olde English Cider three kilometre road race in Westminster with a recurring knee injury.

Sly, recently returned from the United States, was looking forward to a successful season, starting with a trip to Moscow next weekend. But that and the rest of her plans are now in jeopardy.

NAVRATILOVA CONTEMPLATES RETIREMENT

By JOHN PARSONS in Paris

MARTINA NAVRATILOVA, 28, whose dominance of women's lawn tennis in recent years has sometimes dulled the game and imposed a claustrophobic fear on even her principal rivals, hinted yesterday that retirement may not be far away.

"I will continue to play this year for sure and probably next, but after that I really don't know," said the defending champion after once more strolling into the semi-finals of the French Open.

The world champion began pondering her future aloud after being asked if there was anyone on the horizon to challenge either her or Chris Lloyd, who between them have won the last 13 grand slam events.

"Only old age," replied Miss Navratilova, who has suffered only five defeats in 207 singles matches over the last 2½ years, two of them to Mrs Lloyd, who has won the French title five times.

"There are capable players on the circuit, talented enough to get to No. 1, but it'll take a long time to fill our shoes," she said.

Other interests

Miss Navratilova, whose 6-2, 6-2 defeat of Anna Maria Cecchini, of Italy, means that she has dropped only 13 games in 10 sets, said she had other interests which were increasingly attracting her time—golf, horse riding, and ski-ing.

"I'm still enjoying being on the court but I do find myself asking 'Why I am doing this?'" said a player whose form both here and at Wimbledon last year had many acknowledging her as the best woman competitor they had ever seen.

The absence of anything more than token competition, which must make many events boring for Miss Navratilova, was further emphasised when Hana Mandlikova, the 1981 champion, who ought by now to be a consistently serious rival, lost 6-4, 6-4 to Claudia Kohde, of West Germany.

Miss Kohde won as much by her opponent's errors as by her own commitment and skill. She has beaten Miss Navratilova once in 11 meetings, four years ago in Oakland, but confesses: "I don't know if I can beat her this time."

The line-up for the quarter-finals of the men's singles is John McEnroe v Joakim Nystrom and Mats Wilander v Henri Leconte (today) and Stefan Edberg v Jimmy Connors and Martin Jaite v Ivan Lendl (tomorrow).

Lendl cruelly exposed the limitations of Aaron Krickstein, the American teenager who, despite his walloping forehand, has neither the aptitude nor the ability to go to the net. The 6-2, 6-2, 6-2 win for Lendl was about as stimulating as watching a piledriver at work on a building site all day.

Consistently fine serving helped Edberg, 19, a quarter-finalist at the Australian Open, beat fellow-Swede Anders Jarryd. Edberg, who beat Connors in the Memphis final this year, is rapidly developing into one of the game's top prospects on any surface.

Lightning speed

Jaite beat Heinz Gunthardt to become South America's only representative in the last eight, not least because of his lightning speed about the court which enabled him to run down so many of his Swiss opponent's best efforts.

On the centre court, where, at the height of the day, the temperature soared to an almost intolerable 112 degrees, sheer willpower helped Connors's recovery against Francesco Cancellotti.

In what is likely to be his last French Open, Connors found his troublesome forehand a wanton liability in the first set but after he had broken the Italian in the first game of the second set much of the old swashbuckling swagger returned and he struck back to win 3-6, 6-0, 6-4, 6-2.

Although four of the five British juniors lost yesterday in the first round of the 18-and-under event the results were not as disasterous as those of their seniors a week earlier.

All three girls, Jane Wood, Clare Wood and Suzie Mair, lost to opponents who were either seeded or had qualified for the senior event, and Christian Miniussi, the Aregntine who beat Jason Goodall, has a senior Grand Prix win over Vitas Gerulaitis.

Unhappy Shaw ousted

By BILL EDWARDS

STEPHEN SHAW, who leads Britain into the crucial Davis Cup tie against Portugal in Nottingham next week, yesterday made an 81-minute first-round exit from the Beckenham tournament.

The country's highest-ranked player on the world listings went down to the 6ft 6in Californian, Chip Hooper, 6-3, 7-5.

It was not that Shaw did badly on his brief encounter with grass. He kept in the hunt and the match was decided on just two breaks of service—with power being the crucial factor—for 3-1 in the first set and 6-5 in the second.

Just back from the clay courts of Paris, where he suffered another first round loss—that is now three in a row—Shaw said: "I am not happy on grass. I feel mentally flat after Paris. I need a spell to unwind and get my game together.

"I really need a good tournament to build my game up. Here the balls were coming through so fast while I was looking for longer points.

"I had my chances in the first set and the cruellest stroke was to miss by inches with a backhand. Had that gone in, it could have changed the whole match round."

While Shaw licks his wounds, Amanda Brown, the daughter of Ken Brown, the Norwich City soccer manager, again found Beckenham much to her liking. She dismissed the young New Zealander, Ruth Seeman, 6-1, 6-3.

Miss Brown reached the semi-final last year and her performance this time was in keeping with that.

Amateur Golf Championship

Olazabal sees the chances slump

By MICHAEL WILLIAMS

JOSE-MARIA OLAZABAL'S chances of retaining the Amateur Championship slumped spectacularly at Royal Dornoch yesterday when the Spaniard took 86 in the first of two qualifying rounds.

Asked what went wrong, Olazabal pointed first to his driver, then his three-wood and next his two-iron—until he had gone through his complete set of clubs. "That's golf," he said. "Perhaps a 59 tomorrow."

An outward half of 45 and later an eight at the 17th where he lost one ball and was twice unplayable with another, added up to a thoroughly disastrous round that almost completely discounts his chances of reaching tomorrow's match-play stages.

The early signs were ominous, for Olazabal quickly learnt that there was more than a grain of truth in the local saying that the most difficult shot at Dornoch is the second to the second hole.

Cardinal mistake

As this is a par three, it is, on the face of it, a curious evaluation. But Olazabal made the cardinal mistake of missing the green on the right, which is very much the wrong side. His first chip barely reached the top of the steep slope before rolling back to his feet, and he took five.

With three putts already at the first and then a wildly erratic five at the third, Olazabal was once four over par. A brief rally was blunted by a run of 7, 7, 6 from the seventh and there was no way back from there.

Thirty-six holes of stroke-play qualifying is always a good test for the nerves in the hunt to get among the 64 players who will go into match-play tomorrow and while some players will have spent an uneasy night, others should have slept well.

None better than Ian Stephenson, 30, a left-hander from Moortown, who was one of those two-handicap golfers who might have been balloted out of an over-subscribed entry, but avoided getting one of the short straws.

He celebrated his good fortune with a course record of 64 at Golspie, where half the field were engaged. That was four under par and Stephenson could hardly believe the quality of his wedge play and putting.

Altogether he needed only 25 putts. He had four birdies in a row going out and two more coming home, though in this case they were interspersed with a couple of bogeys.

Stephen East, another Yorkshireman, had a 69 at Dornoch as did Dana Banke, 23, who has come all the way from California and so far not regretted a minute of it.

Happy McEvoy

It was a good day, too, for the Midlands. David Gilford, the English champion from Trentham Park, never looked back after chipping in for a birdie at the 7th and had a 70 at Dornoch, while Peter McEvoy, of Copt Heath, was three better with a 67 at the shorter and easier Golspie.

Seventeen pars, only one of which was due to a single putt, and one birdie was good going by the former champion (1977 and 1978) and a neat way of celebrating the birth of his second son a week ago.

Thomson seeks first

By BILL JOHNSON in Vale do Lobo

SCOTTISH golfers, in buoyant mood after three victories in four tournaments last month, pose another threat when the WPGA Tour breaks new ground in the inaugural £20,000 Portuguese Open Championship which begins at Vale do Lobo in the Algarve today.

Only Gillian Stewart out of the five Scots in the top of the Ring and Brymer Order of Merit table is missing from the field of 64 who this week play for a top prize of £2,500.

Consistency has carried Muriel Thomson into the lead on the money list with winnings of £5,655. Even so, Miss Thomson, never outside the first seven in four events, is still looking for a first success of the season.

Miss Thomson shares this situation with other past winners Cathy Panton, Kitrina Douglas and Jenny Lee Smith who are beginning to feel the impact of newcomers Laura Davies and Penny Grice.

Alison Sheard, of South Africa, reappears on the tour to increase the strong overseas challenge to 23. Miss Sheard, winner of three tournaments in 1979 including the British Open, returns after spending most of the year teaching golf in Durban.

After being closed for four days preparation and heavily watered the course is playing longer than its 6,611 yards, though the ability to thread the ball between the avenues of umbrella pine trees is no less important than long hitting.

Davidson rouses Gloucestershire

By BILL MEREDITH

SCOTT DAVIDSON, the dedicated Gloucestershire captain, led his team to a morale-boosting 10½-4½ Channel League win over Dorset at Chipping Sodbury on Sunday before catching the overnight train to Dornoch for the Amateur Championship.

It was a triumph which kindled hopes in Gloucestershire that the League title can be retained although it should be noted that Wiltshire already have two wins under their belts.

Davidson teamed up with young David Wood, having his first senior county run-out on his home course, to beat Steve Allen and Mark McKenna by two holes in the morning and steer Gloucestershire to a 5-0 lead.

After that, the going became tougher for the home team as Dorset piled on the pressure in the top singles. Roger Hearn proved too strong for Robert Broad by 2 and 1, while Tony Lawrence claimed the notable scalp of Gloucestershire's county champion, David Carroll.

McKenna also chipped in with a sound last-hole win over the energetic Davidson, while young Steve Allen confirmed his growing promise with a well-deserved last-hole win over Gloucestershire's experienced veteran, Dick Abbott.

It was all exciting stuff, but nowhere near good enough to pull back the overwhelming advantage achieved by Gloucestershire in the morning.

GLOUCS ... 10½ DORSET ... 4½

After two early defeats, Glamorgan at last got off the mark with two League points in a 9-6 victory over Gwent at Glyne.

On a glorious day by the Swansea coast road to Blackpiy, Gwent just could not cope with the reorganised Glamorgan foursomes pairing and went into lunch 4-1 down.

It was a different story in the afternoon when Gwent won or halved all the top six singles, but the Glamorgan tail wagged and they won fou rin a row at the bottom.

GLAMORGAN ... 9 GWENT ... 6

Berks, Bucks and Oxon showed their strength in the Eastern Counties Foursomes at Hunstanton with 23½ points—just half a point more than runners-up Hertfordshire could manage.

Milk Race

U.S. PAIR IN LUCKY ESCAPE

By PHIL LIGGETT

ANDREW PAULIN and Steve Tilford both escaped serious injury after they collided with a car during a 50 mph descent on the eighth stage of the Milk Race between Hull and Scarborough yesterday.

The two Americans were leading a chasing bunch of 25 riders approximately one minute behind the race leaders into Sleights near Whitby when a car appeared on the course after the police escort had passed.

Tilford crashed into the car and slid underneath while Paulin somersaulted over the top but miraculaurously received relatively minor injuries.

The crash marred another highly competitive day's racing and ended in a fourth stage victory for Czechoslovakia when Vladimir Kozarek outsprinted Joergen Marcussen of Denmark and another Czechoslovakian rider Kvetislav Palov.

Overall leader, Thomas Kirsipuu finished fourth after a thrilling chase in the last five miles that saw the Russian finish in the same time as the winner with 25 other riders immediately behind him.

The first day on the North Yorkshire moors did little to change the overall positions but England's Paul Curran ended a productive day by climbing to sixth place, 1min 13sec behind Kirsipuu after Denmark's Bjarne Riis missed the deceive move and slipped to 25th overall.

A group which included Peter Longbottom (England), Phil Bayton (Raleigh - Weinmann) and Alan Gornall (Gt Britain) began the day's action at Driffield after 16 miles. This group of six stayed ahead until the moors where the race reformed.

Leaving Sleights on the steep one-in-five ascent in Ugglebarnby, Vladimir Poulnikov split the leaders as he raced over the summit followed a length behind Paul Wason who ended ended the day in 16th place overall, an improvement of seven places.

On the long undulating cliff top road to Scarborough the first three riders to finish made their move, but the presence of Palov, fifth overall, presented too much of a threat to the Russians and a reaction brought the three leaders back to the pack as the race crossed the finishing line.

SECOND GP FOR BRITAIN

By BRIAN ALLEN

IT has now been finally confirmed that British motor racing will have two World Championship grand prix this year.

After the British GP at Silverstone on July 21, Brands Hatch is to stage the European GP on Sept. 22—the date originally allocated for the race in Rome, but which has been cancelled.

The European GP is being sponsored by Shell Oils, who are also backing next year's British GP at Brands Hatch as well as the 1985 and 1986 drivers' World Championship endurance races at the Kent circuit.

John Webb, managing director of the company owning Brands Hatch, said the September grand prix would cost more than £1,350,000 to stage, with a Formula One prize fund of £840,000.

Brands Hatch have worked to get the race for 16 months. "We have spent that time at the end of a yo-yo," said Mr Webb. "But we were always confident we would get it. It is our belief that Britain should have two grand prix a year."

Commenting on the cancellation of the Belgian GP at the weekend, he said: "The more you use a circuit the more reliable it becomes. Brands Hatch is used every day of the year. We are confident we won't have that kind of problem."

Soccer

Reconnaissance is name of the game

By DONALD SAUNDERS in Mexico

ANYONE looking forward to a festival of sparkling football during England's visit to Mexico City, along with Italy, the World Cup holders, and West Germany, the runners-up, is likely to be bitterly disappointed.

It is becoming increasingly clear that Italy and England have come to the scene of next year's World Cup final simply to try to discover how their teams react to the strain of playing at altitude, in sub-tropical heat.

I am not quite sure why the Germans are making the long journey, since they do not arrive until next Monday—only two days before they play England and six before their only other game against Mexico.

What is certain is that the results of these matches will be as significant as the outcome of a kick-up game between holiday-makers on any beach in the Northern hemisphere this summer.

Italian plan

Italy used five substitutes during their 1-1 draw in the opening match against Mexico at the Aztec Stadium on Sunday. They and England may well each employ a similar total on the same pitch on Thursday.

"I have had a chat with Enzo Bearzot, Italy's manager," disclosed Bobby Robson. "He wants all his 23 players to be stripped and would like to play up to five substitutes.

"I have agreed and we shall have our 22 stripped—though that does not mean we shall use five substitutes."

England's manager was at pains to emphasise that neither he nor Mr Bearzot wished to devalue the Mexican tournament, for which no points will be at stake and no trophies awarded.

Nevertheless it is obvious that the primary objective of each manager is to obtain tactical and physiological information.

Television rights

They have not come here to provide entertainment for spectators who have bought tickets or for the television companies who have paid for the right to offer the matches to their viewers.

In my opinion, there is something not quite right or, from a public relations viewpoint, wise about that, even allowing that brief acclimatisation may lead to some players becoming exhausted inside 90 minutes.

Still, if FIFA insist on staging their World Cup competition in an environment totally unfamiliar and potentially hostile to most of the probable finalists—for the second time in 16 years—who can blame managers for taking every opportunity to collect invaluable data?

It was clear from the Italians' laboured performance on Sunday that next year's finals will be much like those of 1970. We shall see football played at a snail's pace, with occasional bursts of activity.

Absorbing match

That does not necessarily mean they will be boring from start to finish. Indeed England's game against Brazil in 1970 remains the most absorbing I've seen in over 30 years.

Spectators and viewers, however, must be prepared for a tournament that is likely to exercise the intellect rather than send the pulse racing.

As Mr Robson noted on Sunday, the Italians had difficulty in sustaining attacks. "Once a move broke down, they fell back and then had to take a breather before they could go forward again," he observed.

No doubt the World champions will work on that problem during weeks of preparation at altitude next May. So will England, who, in the last few days, have added 800 metres to the average distance they can run in 12 minutes.

Even so, it is highly unlikely that either side will be able to provide a classic game on Thursday.

We can only hope the traditional pride of the players from both countries will lift it a little above the standard of a pre-season practice match.

WEST GERMANY SCORN BAN

While Norwich City were yesterday going ahead with plans for a pre-season tour to Scandinavia, West German clubs said they would still be staging exhibition matches against penalised English teams in Europe.

Following the indefinite ban on English clubs from the three major European competitions, several West Germans criticised UEFA's handling of the situation. And Borussia Moenchengladbach are to play a benefit match against Liverpool on Aug. 5.

Any UEFA sanctions against Liverpool, after the Brussels tragedy, are to be announced on June 20.

Eighth win for Rutter

By GEORGE TURNBULL in Douglas

TONY RUTTER, the veteran rider from Brierley Hill in the West Midlands, yesterday employed all his vast experience and roadcraft to score his eighth TT victory on the Isle of Man and notch up his fourth formula Two win in five years.

The Formula Two world champion for the past four years judged his ride to perfection on the big 600cc Ducati, and took the chequered flag in 2 hours 6 minutes 6 seconds at an average speed of 107·79mph for the six-lap event.

Rutter's victory was watched by his 73-year-old mother, who was attending her first TT. He finished a comfortable 20 seconds ahead of John Weedon, 36, from Ibstock, Leicestershire, who in turn was two minutes ahead of Gary Padgett, from Batley.

Smashed lap record

But the winning margin tells little of the drama and disappointments of the race as Rutter, 43, guided his big four-stroke around the awesome 37·73-mile mountain course in pursuit of the little 350cc, but very fast, two-stroke Yamahas.

Rutter was lying fifth on the first lap as the Irish road racing champion, Brian Reid, smashed the lap record from a standing start with a lap of 110·46mph.

But then the Ulsterman, who had been timed at 156mph through the speed trap, began to falter with ignition problems. Padgett, 24, took up the lead, and held it for three laps until two retaining clips, worth a mere 40p, snapped, and his exhaust pipe came loose.

This forced the Yorkshireman into a lengthy pit stop at the end of lap four, while holding a six-second lead, and it probably cost him the race.

It was at this point that Rutter, who had kept a few revs in hand while sizing up the opposition, seized his chance. He wound up the Ducati and hurtled off in pursuit of Weedon and his Yamaha, who had taken the lead while Padgett was in the pits.

By the end of lap five, Rutter was leading the field just as he had planned, he explained later.

Padgett bravely re-entered the fray, and while there was little chance of him catching the leaders, he refused to give up. His efforts were rewarded when a luckless Neil Tomworth had to retire while lying third, and Padgett happily seized his place.

FORMULA 2 (6 laps, 226 miles): T. Rutter (Ducati), 2h 6m 0·6s (107·91 mph) 1; J. Weedon (Yamaha), 2-08-20·6 (107·35mph). 2; G. Padgett (Yamaha), 2-08-20·6 (105·85mph). 3. Fastest Lap: B. Reid (Yamaha) 20m 29·6s (110·46 mph).

SIDECAR (3 laps, 113 miles): D. Hallam (Yamaha), 1-05-01. (104·45 mph). 1; M. Boddice (Yamaha) 1-05-10·4 (104·20mph). 2; N. Rollason (Phoenix) 1-05-23 (103·87mph). 3. Fastest Lap: Boddice 21m 3·2s (107·10mph).

SAMMEL OUT TO ROBINSON

By ROGER MALONE

MARTIN ROBINSON, who last year set the GMC Northern tournament agog by removing the top-seeded Bill Scanlon in the first round, again rose to the occasion in Manchester yesterday with a victory over overseas opposition.

The Bolton player, at 29 no longer dreaming of the sport's highest honours, came spiritedly from behind to beat David Sammel 4-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Although the South African represents nowhere near the prestigious scalp of the American, Scanlon, a former Wimbledon quarter-finalist not entered at Manchester this year, Robinson demonstrated how diligent retrieving and subtle placements could evenually tame the fiery serving of a 6ft 4in opponent whose legs were six years younger.

Indulgence hopes rise

By TONY FAIRCHILD

A FURTHER attempt to recover Graham Walker's one-tonner, Indulgence, which sank on Sunday morning towards the finish of the first British Admiral's Cup trial, was being made off Bembridge last night.

Two earlier attempts to raise the craft yesterday were apparently thwarted when flotation bags failed and the yacht settled back on the seabed — in the main shipping lane.

With the top of the mast of the £250,000 yacht just visible at low tide, there were still hopes last night that the vessel, which was a leading contender for selection for the One Ton Cup and the British Admiral's Cup team, might still be saved.

Hit protrudent

The Berthon Boat Co., at Lymington, had been standing by from Sunday "to work round the clock" to have the boat repaired and back in the water for the second set of Admiral's Cup trials on Saturday and Sunday.

Obviously the full extent of the damage could not be known while the yacht still lay below the water, but the earlier attempt to raise Indulgence had suggested that her topsides were quite badly damaged.

It is believed now that the yacht, which hit the bottom while close tacking on the Isle of Wight shore early on Sunday morning, was holed on her leeward side after hitting a protrudent.

Because the crew then tacked away, leaving the hole on the weather side and above the waterline, the extent of the damage was not fully known until the yacht tacked again and began to ship much more water.

She sank about 45 minutes after the mishap, the liferafts of the yacht just failing to keep her afloat. A Trinity House vessel was also standing by because of the, obstruction caused by the yacht, rated by Mr Walker to be the fastest he has owned.

Meanwhile last night the Royal Ocean Racing Club were hearing the claims for time from the crews of four other Admiral's Cup triallists which gave assistance to Indulgence, and the protest which arose from the race.

SHELLING STOPS FOOD CONVOY TO BEIRUT CAMP

By BARRY O'BRIEN in Damascus

TALKS to secure the ceasefire at two Palestinian camps in Beirut by Moslem Shi'ite militiamen took place in Damascus yesterday as renewed shelling was reported at another camp.

The shells stopped four truckloads of food supplies from the United Nations relief and works agency from getting into the Bourjel-Barajneh camp near Beirut airport.

About 17,000 people there have been under fire in shelters for two weeks and are reported to be critically short of food.

Amal Shi'ite militiamen were reported to have een pounding the camp with shells since morning.

Syrian officials met representatives of the Damascus-based Palestine National Salvation Front and Lebanese factions in efforts to resolve the deadlock over Shi'ite demands for the surrender of all Palestinian weapons in the camp.

The Palestinians insist as a condition for a ceasefire agreement that weapons must remain in their hands until all Lebanon's warring factions are disarmed under a comprehensive Syrian-sponsored settlement of the 10-year civil war.

Troop movements

Western diplomats in Damascus had no confirmation yesterday of reports from Beirut that some of the 30,000 Syrian troops deployed in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley were grouping in preparation for a move into Beirut.

Sources said there had been indications of some movement but nothing on a large scale, such as an armoured brigade.

President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon is understood to have asked for the return of a Syrian peace-keeping force to Beirut. He had 36 hours of meetings with the Syrian leader President Hafez al-Assad in Damascus last week.

LEAR CASH WRITE-OFF BY BRITAIN

By Our Political Staff

THE Government does not expect to recover any of the £56·28 million invested in Lear Fan, the Ulster - based aircraft company which ceased trading last month.

This was indicated last night by Dr Boyson, Minister of State for Northern Ireland.

He also revealed that some £11,810,000 was payment of a Government 1980 guarantee on the company to the Ulster Investment Bank, which last week recalled its loan

The Government was freed from a commitment to invest another $4,790,000 (£3,690,000) with the company ceasing to trade.

High-risk venture

Dr Boyson told MPs in a Commons written reply that sums invested by th eGovernment and the private sector represented venture capital in a high-technology project.

"The failure cannot in any way be blamed on the Northern Ireland workforce," he said. "Indeed, their loyalty and contribution to the project is to be praised.

"Had this high-risk venture succeeded, it would have contributed greatly to employment and to the economy of Northern Ireland."

where people can be worse off if they have pay rise and the state payment is cut.

This poverty trap is being ended by assessing the level of the new benefit on take home pay, not on gros earnings as happens with Family Income Supplement.

Although the Death Grant and Maternity Grant are being abolished those unable to meet the cost of a funeral or pay the expenses of a new-born baby wil be able to apply for help to a newly-created Social Fund which will act as a safety net for the poor.

Size of payments not set yet

The Green Paper does not indicate the level of any of these benefits Mr Fowler said it was necessary to establish the structure of the new benefits before fixing their cash values.

A period until next September has been set aside for discussion of the new proposals after which a White Paper will set out plans for legislation.

The proposals were attacked by Mr Meacher last night as an erosion of the fundamental principle of the Welfare State.

He described the abolition of SERPS as the betrayal of a pledge given by Mrs Thatcher before the last election when she said: "Nor are there any plans to change the earnings-related component of the State pension."

Mr Meacher condemned the proposals as "this new Victorian Poor Law' and told the Government that they would "pave the way for election of the next Labour Government."

'Means tests for the poor'

The Child Poverty Action Group said t he package was "just the same old story of benefit cuts and means tests for the poor."

The new benefit to replace Supplementary Benefit was "simply reshuffling the pack of misery" for the millions who depended on it.

Mr David Hobman, director of Age Concern, accused the Government of undertaking its revie wof benefits in isolation, without a concensus and without full public consulation.

"What is the point of planning for your old age when pensioners are continually in a see-saw of unectrainty about their future."

DRINK BAN

on assemblies in the open air will considerably strengthen the powers available to the police to guard against the risk of disorder."

Wherever police had reason to expect disorder at a football match they would, in effect, be able to limit the gate and impose other conditions to minimise the risk of trouble.

Mr Justice Popplewell, the High Court judge who is inquiring into the fire tragedy at Bradford City and crowd violence at Birmingham, City on May 11, would, because his terms of reference were already wide enough, be able to take into account any lessons learned from Brussels, added Mrs Thatcher.

On the increasing of crowd safety arrangements at clubs in the third and fourth divisions, she mentioned the greater use of closed-circuit television.

Earlier in the day she had been informed that the Football Trust — which gets £7 million a year from pools firms spot-the-ball competition — was proposing to allocate £500,000 for that purpose as a first step, which would give cover in more than 30 grounds in addition to the 11 in which experiments were already taking place.

However, the events at Brussels had made it clear that more was needed.

She added: "I shall be discussing urgently with the football authorities proposals for:

THE INTRODUCTION of a practical scheme of membership cards, either on a club or national basis;

PROPOSALS for far more all-ticket matches;

STRICTER controls, or in some cases a ban, on visiting spectators.

Mrs Thatcher added: "I recognise that such measures would mean a radical change in the way in which football is conducted in this country.

"But radical change is needed if football is to survive as a spectator sport."

The Prime Minister also said: "In the meantime we are anxious to give the Brussels *authorities every possible assist*ance in bringing to justice and dealing appropriately with people from this country who have committed offences in connection with last Wednesday's match.

Extradition move

"Arrangements already exist between the United Kingdom and Belgian for the extradition of those accused of serious offences of violence such as murder, manslaughter, wounding or serious assault.

"If the Belgian authorities were to seek the extradition of someone accused of such an offence, we should naturally them every assistance to meet our requirements on evidence.

"One disincentive for the Belgian authorities may be that it is less trouble simply to expel Britons who may have committed offences rather than to prosecute and sentence them appropriately.

"We intend to offer the Belgians the opportunity, in accordance with the Repatriation of Prisoners Act, of removal to prison in this country of anyone who may be given a prison sentence in Belgium."

DEREK JACOBI IN 'MUCH ADO' WINS A TONY

By Our New York Staff

Derek Jacobi, whose Benedick in the Royal Shakespeare Company's production of "Much Ado About Nothing" was among the few distinguished performances in an unusually lean season on Broadway, won best-actor honours at the 1985 Tony Awards on Sunday night.

The best-actress Tony went to Stockard Channing for her role in Peter Nichols's play "A Day in the Death of Joe Egg". The play itself won a Tony for best revival.

The evening's top winner, a musical called "Big River" and created by newcomers to Broadway captured seven awards. It was adapted from Mark Twain's stories by Roger Miller and William Hauptman. Neil Simon's "Biloxi Blues" was chosen as best play.

IDENTITY CARDS F A chief's doubts

The Government's proposals on soccer hooligans were welcomed last night by the FA Secretary, Mr Ted Croker.

But he added: "I was very disappointed to hear the murmur of approval throughout the House when it was suggested there should be a national identity card scheme.

"Every system I have seen would allow the committed hooligan to wave a handful of cards at clubs and say 'take your pick.' Any system which can be readily abused is exactly what these types of individuals welcome."

Mr Croker also made clear that football clubs would need financial help to bring in the measures outlined and to modernise their grounds.

'TRES WARM' OFFER FOR OLYMPICS

By MICHAEL FARR in East Berlin

CONTENDERS for the 1992 Summer and Winter Olympics made a spirited bid yesterday to win approval for their cities, with the Mayoress of Brisbane promising "un tres warm climate."

"We have a warm, friendly country with no terrorism and violence. Lots of sunshine, kangaroos and koalas," Mrs Sally-Anne Atkinson promised.

She explained to a doubtful French journalist that Brisbane in August, though in the Australian winter, was like a European summer.

Twelve cities made presentations to the 90th session of the International Olympic Committee, formally opened by Herr Honecker, the East German leader, in a festive ceremony in East Berlin last night.

Among front runners for the Summer Games nomination were Paris and Barcelona, though Amsterdam could emerge as a compromise candidate.

Wooing Press

London, which will meet an extended mid-August deadline for possible selection, is only represented unofficially in East Berlin.

The French sent a top-level delegation headed by M. Jacques Chirac, Mayor of Paris and a former French Prime Minister, and including a former world skating champion, M. Alain Calmat, Minister of Sport and Youth.

The Paris team, in an attempt to woo the world's Press, offered gifts and a real champagne lunch, something rare in East Berlin.

The Barcelona delegation, perhaps confident that in Senor Juan Antonio Samaranch, the Spanish IOC president, they have a natural supporter, were hoping "fourth time lucky."

They had previously sought the Olympic summer nomination for 1924, 1936 and 1972.

Eiffel flame

For France, M. Chirac said Paris intended "to organise a huge cultural manifestation of all arts and sport, never equalled before."
